EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Cardiovascular disease (CVD) continues to impose a heavy burden in terms of cost, disability and death in Australia.

Evidence suggests that increasing remoteness, where cardiac services are scarce, is linked to an increased risk of dying from CVD. Fatal CVD events are reported to be between 20% and 50% higher in rural areas compared to major cities.

The Cardiac ARIA project, with its extensive use of Geographic Information Systems (GIS), ranks each of Australia's 20,387 urban, rural and remote population centres by accessibility to essential services or resources for the management of a cardiac event.

This unique, innovative and highly collaborative project delivers a powerful tool to highlight and combat the burden imposed by cardiovascular disease (CVD) in Australia.

Cardiac ARIA is innovative. It is a model that could be applied internationally and to other acute and chronic conditions such as mental health, midwifery, cancer, respiratory, diabetes and burns services.

Cardiac ARIA was designed to:

1. Determine by expert panel, what were the minimal services and resources required for the management of a cardiac event in any urban, rural or remote population locations in Australia using a single patient pathway to access care.
2. Derive a classification using GIS accessibility modelling for each of Australia's 20,387 urban, rural and remote population locations.
3. Compare the Cardiac ARIA categories and population locations with census derived population characteristics.

Key findings are as follows:

- In the event of a cardiac emergency, the majority of Australians had very good access to cardiac services. Approximately 71% or 13.9 million people lived within one hour of a category one hospital.
- 68% of older Australians lived within one hour of a category one hospital (Principal Referral Hospital with access to Cardiac Catheterisation).
- Only 40% of indigenous people lived within one hour of the category one hospital.
- 16% (74000) of indigenous people lived more than one hour from a hospital.
- 3% (91,000) of people 65 years of age or older lived more than one hour from any hospital or clinic.
- Approximately 96%, or 19 million, of people lived within one hour of the four key services to support cardiac rehabilitation and secondary prevention.
- 75% of indigenous people lived within one hour of the four cardiac rehabilitation services to support cardiac rehabilitation and secondary prevention. Fourteen percent (64,000 persons) indigenous people had poor access to the four key services to support cardiac rehabilitation and secondary prevention.

- 12% (56,000) of indigenous people were more than one hour from a hospital and only had access one the four key services (usually a medical service) to support cardiac rehabilitation and secondary prevention.

Outcomes

- The key outcome of Cardiac ARIA was to make a contribution to improve heart health for all Australian communities.
- Cardiac ARIA is a potentially powerful tool for policy makers and researchers, to both highlight and combat the burden of cardiovascular disease in urban, rural and remote Australia by classifying access to cardiac services in an objective geographic way which establishes a benchmark for practice.
- Cardiac ARIA is focused on community access/support as opposed to medical centred responses. This allows communities to be proactive and take the lead in improving access to cardiac services based on the Cardiac ARIA index for their population location.
- Cardiac ARIA provides a geographic measure of access to cardiac services and does not measure health system performance. Therefore it reflects "What should happen…NOT what does happen".
- Cardiac ARIA will be iterative as data access improves.

Data Issues

- Pre-hospital emergency management data was not included. Unfortunately due to gate keeping of datasets, multiple and complex data definitions and incomplete data availability the emergency component of the cardiac ARIA index was not modelled.
- Further funding and extension work from the project will see this section of the model completed and the model updated in the future.

Implications for Practice

- The results can be used to identify geographic hotspots where there is a mismatch between demand and provision of cardiac services.
- This report does not recommend that cardiac servoces such as PCI should be located in every town. However, the Cardiac ARIA index identifies the rural centres that have sub-optimal access to cardiac services within a one hour radius.
- Inequities in access in rural areas will continue without system change. The Cardiac ARIA index can be used to help benchmark cardiovascular health service delivery against service requirements, or systems may be in place but not fuctioning synchronistically.
- For population locations with limited access to cardiac services (i.e. those with high Cardiac ARIA scores) a case can be made for introducing innovative practice to overcome the tyrannies of distance such as Thrombolytic drug rotation systems and virtual or electronically supported cardiac care.
- The Cardiac ARIA model also highlights the areas where innovative models of care may be required for secondary prevention (as determined by Cardiac ARIA Aftercare Index).
- Access to the four key services to support cardiac rehabilitation and secondary prevention does not equate to usage.

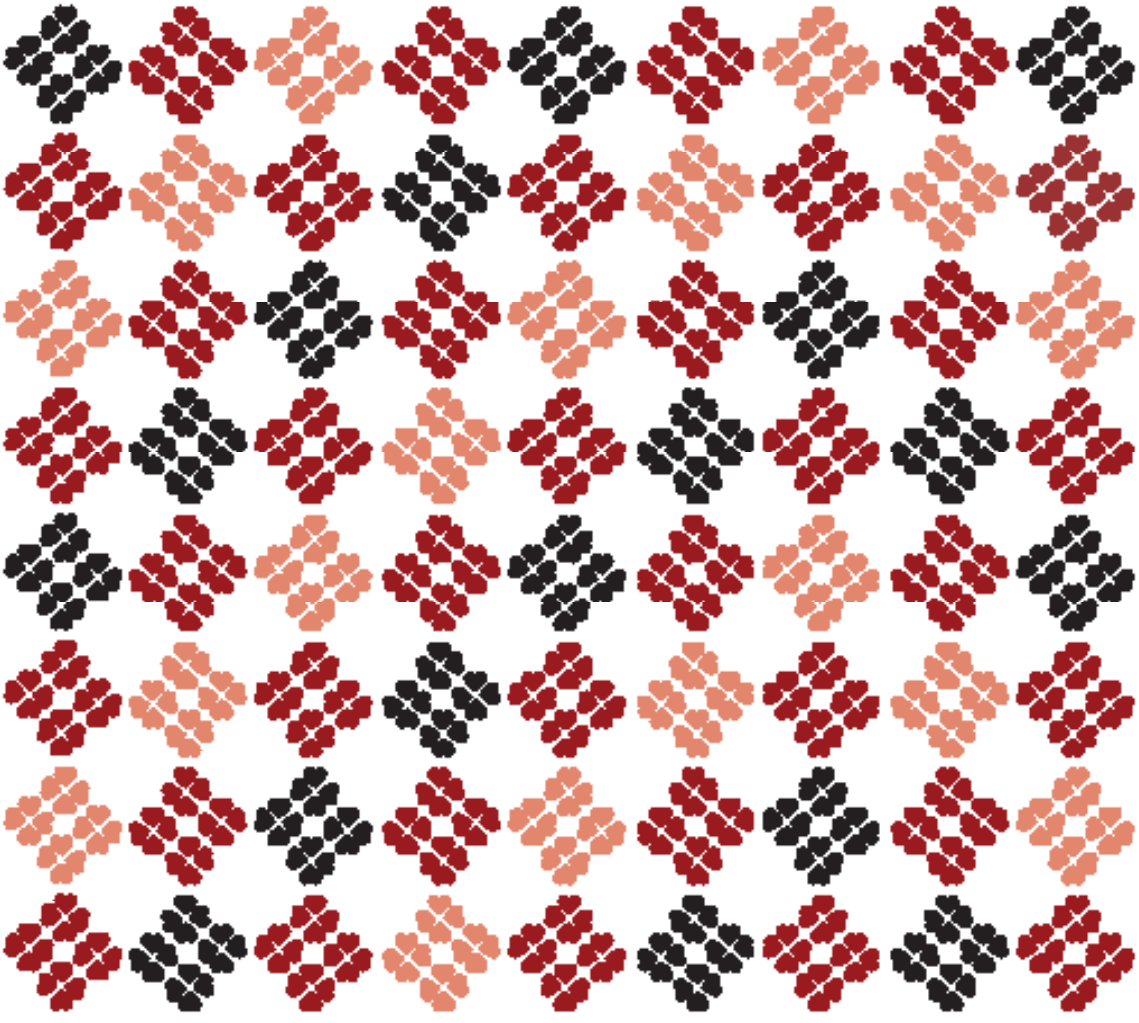
INTRODUCTION



INTRODUCTION

Cardiovascular disease and access to healthcare in Australia

In a cardiovascular emergency (heart attack or stroke) every minute counts. For the prevention of CVD every healthy year counts. Cardiovascular disease (CVD) is Australia's most important public health issue (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) 2010). In 2006, CVD claimed the lives of almost 46,000 Australians accounting for 34% of all deaths; deaths that were largely preventable (Australian National Heart Foundation 2010). It was estimated that 3.67 million Australians were affected by CVD and of the ten National Health Priority Areas, the disease burden associated with CVD (22%) exceeded that of any other disease group (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) 1999) (Australian National Heart Foundation 2010). Despite a reduction in age adjusted mortality over the last few decades, nearly four in ten deaths of Australians each year are due to CVD (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) 2009; Australian National Heart Foundation 2010).

With increases in life expectancy and an ageing population it is expected that 25% of Australians will have CVD by 2051. Similar trends are occurring in most industrialised countries (Mackay & Mensah 2004). Furthermore, CVD contributes to significant morbidity and impaired quality of life. It is within this context that more than one million Australians live with long-term illness and disability from conditions associated with CVD (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) 2006; Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) 2009; Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) 2010).

There is a strong relationship between CVD and a range of risk factors and health-related conditions (O'Brien 2005). An individual's risk of illness cannot be considered in isolation from the population to which he or she belongs (Berkman & Kawachi 2000). Therefore, there is a need to better understand the interactions between populations at risk, healthcare availability, social and environmental factors and demographic changes. Accurate information on these factors will influence our ability to meet the needs of Australians who are already living with CVD and those who will make the transition to symptomatic CVD in the near future (Figure 1).

(With permission from the National Heart Foundation 2007)

Epidemiological models predict that the prevalence of CVD in Australia will rise with the progressive ageing of the population (Australian National Heart Foundation 2001). Australia is already a world leader in population growth in those aged 85 years and over and has the third highest population increase in people aged 65 years and over (Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) 2004). The ABS population projections have indicated that there will be a shift in the Australian age structure with the proportion of persons aged 65 years and over projected to increase from 13% in 2007 to between 23%-25% (+5.4 million persons) by 2056. Conversely, the proportion of persons aged zero to 14 years and 15 to 64 years is projected to decline from 19.6% and 67.4% in 2007 to between 16% and 60.5% respectively by 2056 (Australian Bureau of Statistics 2008). Much of the expected increase in Australia's older population has been attributed to the impact of the ageing 'Baby Boomer' cohort, decreasing fertility rates and the resultant decrease in the proportion of young people (Strategic Planning & Research Branch 2003).

Compared to previous generations, the current generation of older Australians is more educated and experience better health (Australian National Heart Foundation 2001). This enhanced status, particularly in regard to health, has been attributed to continuous improvements in medical techniques and treatments, improved diet, increased access to medical services, and generally improved life-styles (Strategic Planning & Research Branch 2003).

The healthy ageing of Australia's older population has also resulted in significant retirement migration from metropolitan to non-metropolitan areas (in the 65 years and over age group) and a blurring of the sharp boundaries once drawn around Australia's major cities. Population growth in non-metropolitan areas is variable with growth in more accessible geographic locations, such as the urban fringes and the "sea and tree" rural areas favoured by retirees, while more remote areas are in decline (Clark et al. 2005). Regrettably, services in these areas, including health services, have not kept pace with the changing face of Australia's non-metropolitan population. Some communities, situated in the fringes of major cities are located between 50 and 80 kilometres away from the central business district, major health facilities, general practitioner and cardiac services (Wilkinson 1999; Clark et al. 2007b).

There is also clear evidence to suggest that inequities in health outcomes exist between socio-economically advantaged and disadvantaged groups. The gap is widening and poor CVD outcomes are not equally shared across the entire population (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2006). People from socio-economically disadvantaged groups have a higher risk profile and are more likely to die from CVD than those from more privileged backgrounds (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2003b). One of the most disadvantaged groups in Australia are Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who experience a 2.6 fold greater risk of CVD mortality and a 1.4 higher rate of overall hospitalization, compared to other Australians (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2003a, 2005). Importantly, 41% of all CVD deaths and 30% of Indigenous deaths occur in rural and remote areas of Australia (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) 2003).

Inequities to health services

Together with significant health inequalities, inequalities also exist in access to and delivery of healthcare services in Australia (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2003a). This is particularly evident for specialist cardiac services in the outer urban fringes and rural and remote areas, where few cardiologists live and work, and a large proportion of the provision of healthcare falls upon the local GPs. With the trend to down-grade small hospitals to aged care centres, or close them completely, there is an increasing need for people with CVD to travel, often long distances, to larger urban or city-based cardiac care specialist centres to receive appropriate and timely care (Lyle 2002). Given that people with CVD take more health actions than the average Australian (National Heart Foundation of Australia 2004; Peterson, Walker & Southern 2005) the added financial costs associated with travel imposes a significant burden on our older population (National Heart Foundation of Australia 2004; Peterson, Walker & Southern 2005).

We predict that possible anomalies of an unambiguously geographic approach to defining accessibility without socio-economic, urban/rural and population characteristics are that there may be population locations which will be:

- Highly Accessible to cardiac services with low need i.e. the predominantly young populations that live within capital cities
- Moderately Accessible to cardiac services with very high need i.e. the “sea and tree” rural areas favoured by retirees
- Very Remote to cardiac services with low need i.e. the predominantly young men with relatively high income in remote mining and fishing communities
- Very Remote to cardiac services with high need i.e. indigenous communities.

Definition of a cardiac event and the underpinning evidence for practice

For the purposes of this project, a "cardiac event" requiring healthcare intervention was defined as any situation in the community where a person may exhibit the following symptoms:

- Chest pain
- Collapse
- Loss of consciousness
- Severe dyspnoea
- Syncope
- Sustained palpitations; and
- Light-headedness.

The symptoms can be linked to life threatening sequelae associated with the following cardiac conditions:

- Cardiac arrest (Appendix 1.1)
- Life threatening arrhythmias (Appendix 1.1)
- Acute coronary syndromes (Appendix 1.2 & 1.3)
- Acute decompensating heart failure (Appendix 1.4).

International and national (Australian) evidence based practice guidelines recommend the steps needed to respond to life threatening sequelae (American College of Cardiology ACC & American Heart Association AHA 2001; The American College of Cardiology et al. 2001; The American College of Cardiology /American Heart Association, Task Force on Practice Guidelines and the European Society of Cardiology Committee for Practice Guidelines & in Collaboration with NASPE-Heart Rhythm Society 2003; European Society of Cardiology (ESC) Task Force for the diagnosis and treatment of CHF 2005; American College of Cardiology American Heart Association Task Force, European Society of Cardiology Committee for Practice Guidelines & in collaboration with the European Heart Rhythm Association and the Heart Rhythm Society 2006; Krum et al. 2006; National Heart Foundation of Australia and the Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand 2006, 2007; Dickstein et al. 2008; Australian Resuscitation Council (ARC) 2009; National Heart Foundation of Australia 2009) (Appendix 1).

Translation of guidelines for the management of a cardiac event

The first service or resource required from time of onset of cardiac symptoms is access to emergency services (calling the emergency number 000 in Australia). Telecommunication services are variable throughout Australia, and access to mobile, landline or satellite is not guaranteed (Australian Communications and Media Authority 2007). This call should activate transport (ambulance-air/road) and emergency first response (paramedics and defibrillator) where available.

In a cardiac arrest scenario (ventricular fibrillation (VF)) time is critical. If corrected within one minute it will lead to survival in well over 90% of patients. Implementation is difficult because of the 10% fall in survival for every minute that passes from onset of VF until a defibrillator can be used. Survival of cardiac arrest is related to geographic areas and outcomes are statistically related to proximity to a defibrillator, first responder and ambulance (O'Rourke 2002).

For the acute decompensating heart failure patient, time is also critical, as oxygen and airway are compromised by the acute pulmonary oedema. Access to emergency intensive care airway management is essential although many intensive care ambulances and small emergency services can provide continuous positive airway support (CPAP or BiPAP) (Krum et al. 2006).

For an ACS scenario research recommends, for best cardiac outcomes (survival and preservation of heart muscle), that the patient needs to be seen by a doctor, within a medical facility that can provide electrocardiographic (ECG) monitoring and administration of cardiac pharmacotherapies including fibrinolysis and communication with a cardiologist within the first hour (National Heart Foundation of Australia and the Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand 2006; Australian Resusciation Council (ARC) 2009). Alternately, (for best preservation of heart muscle) the patient should reach a medical facility with 24 hour percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) services or in the care of a coronary or intensive care unit (CCU or ICU) (National Heart Foundation of Australia and the Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand 2006; Chew DP et al. 2008). If this is not achievable, patients can still benefit from transfer to coronary angioplasty and a Coronary Care Unit (CCU) within 12 to 48 hours of onset of symptoms. Access to a cardiac surgery unit may also be needed when indicated (National Heart Foundation of Australia and the Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand 2006).

Finally, the continuum of care must extend beyond discharge from hospital. A recently published report indicates that mortality rates of 10% in the first year after hospital discharge have not changed for over 20 years. Poor outcomes when the patient returns home continues to be a concern (Richmond 2010).

The minimal services required by a patient after a cardiac event should include access to:

- a general practitioner for monitoring and on-going management;
- a pharmacy, and ensure compliance with a routine cardiac medications regime (most patients are on an average of six to nine medications);
- a cardiac rehabilitation service and follow-up with a cardiologist as required (National Heart Foundation of Australia and the Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand 2006; Clark et al. 2007c): and
- a pathology service to ensure timely monitoring of drug levels and cardiac biomarkers (kidney function and cholesterol).

Revisiting the golden hour

The reduction in mortality that can be achieved with reperfusion therapy in patients with evolving myocardial infarction, depends on the time elapsing between onset of symptoms and initiation of treatment or, more specifically, on the duration of coronary occlusion before reperfusion (Invasive compared with non-invasive treatment in unstable coronary-artery disease: FRISC II 1999; Fox et al. 2002) (Keeley EC, Boura & Grines 2003).

The optimal early management of patients presenting to a hospital with acute coronary syndrome has been studied extensively over the past ten years. Recent randomised trials and meta-analyses have shown better clinical outcomes in patients assigned to an early invasive strategy, including primary percutaneous coronary intervention for those with persistent ST segment elevation (Keeley, Boura & Grines 2003). The meta-analyses also reported better outcomes with early revascularisation with percutaneous coronary intervention or coronary artery bypass grafting in those with non-ST segment elevation acute coronary syndrome (Invasive compared with non-invasive treatment in unstable coronary-artery disease: FRISC II 1999; Fox et al. 2002).

In the "real world" the choice of a management strategy is often governed by the facilities available at the hospital at which a patient initially presents. Though thrombolytic and antithrombotic therapies are widely available, only 20% of emergency care departments in Australia have access to a cardiac catheterisation laboratory, and still fewer hospitals have the capability to perform immediate percutaneous coronary intervention or coronary artery bypass grafting (Chew et al. 2008).

The issue of whether access to interventional facilities affects clinical outcomes in patients admitted with acute coronary syndrome is under scrutiny (Brieger et al. 2010; Forge 2010). A positive association between the availability of a catheterisation laboratory and improved outcomes would argue for a change in the routing of patients with acute coronary syndrome from the nearest community hospital to a regional specialised tertiary care hospital with immediate access to a catheterisation laboratory (Topol & Kereiakes 2003).

A review of 2380 patients with chest pain admitted to 27 Australian hospitals between January 2003 and August 2005 found that only 20% of patients with ACS who were admitted to coronary care units in hospitals without angiographic services underwent coronary angiography. Low intervention rates such as these have consistently been shown to be associated with poorer outcomes, prompting recommendations that access to catheterisation laboratories for high-risk patients with NSTEACS should be increased (Walters et al. 2008).

The global registry of acute coronary events (GRACE), is an ongoing multinational data collection on baseline characteristics, management, and clinical outcomes of patients within the entire spectrum of acute coronary syndrome. GRACE has investigated the relation between access to a cardiac catheterisation laboratory and the use of percutaneous coronary intervention or coronary artery bypass grafting and clinical outcomes in patients admitted with suspected acute coronary syndrome (GRACE Investigators 2001; Goldberg et al. 2004). Research findings supported current strategies of directing patients with suspected acute coronary syndrome to the nearest hospital with acute care facilities, irrespective of the availability of a catheterisation laboratory, and argue against early routine transfer of these patients to tertiary care hospitals with interventional facilities (GRACE Investigators 2001; Goldberg et al. 2004).

Currently in the US fewer than 5% of patients with ST elevation myocardial infarction (STEMI) receive PCI within 90 minutes. In general PCI is used more frequently in low-risk than high-risk patients (Frans Van de Werf et al. 2005). In additon, no more than 50% of eligible patients with non-ST elevation myocardial infarction (NSTEACS) in the GRACE (global registry of acute coronary events) registry received all indicated therapies (Carruthers et al. 2005) (See Figure 2).

(With permission Prof. Derek Chew, Flinders Private Hospital: 2010)

Strategies to improve access to timely cardiac care must include and increase public awareness of the need to reduce delay in seeking medical help for cardiac symptoms. Second, as an aid to rapid diagnosis when there is chest pain suggestive of infarction, the general practitioner or ambulance team should obtain (preferably on-site) a computer-interpreted standard 12-lead Electrocardiograph (ECG) and rapid electronic transmission of the ECG data to a cardiac specialist. With certainty of diagnosis, thrombolytic therapy may be started quickly, before hospital admission. Patients in whom myocardial infarction cannot be confirmed on site and those presenting directly to the emergency department, still benefit from emergency room initiation of thrombolytic infusion. Avoidance of unnecessary treatment delay should be given top priority to improve the survival prospects of patients with suspected evolving myocardial infarction. The concept of a first golden hour in myocardial infarction, although close to 30 years since conceptualisation, is still relevant today.

The benefit of thrombolytic therapy initiated within 30 to 60 minutes after onset of symptoms can be estimated at 65 to 80 additional patients alive at one month per 1000 persons treated compared with conventional therapy. The benefit of therapy within one to two hours is in the range 37–50 per 1000 persons treated (Boersma et al. 1996) (Figure 2).

CARDIAC ARIA

Synthesis of the relevant guidelines that determine what service and resource requirements are needed for implementation into practice in Australia ultimately should be governed by geography. It would not be appropriate to have a cardiac catheterisation laboratory within every community in Australia. However it would be totally appropriate to have systems in place (patient care pathways) in all communities that could be mobilised to ensure all Australian's have an equal chance of being at the right place for cardiac care at the right time. To achieve this, anew index, Cardiac ARIA was developed to measure the time and distance from any population location in Australian to appropriate cardiac care along the recommended clinical pathway from the emergency call to when patients return home.

Methods

Cardiac ARIA was developed in three key phases. First an expert panel of cardiologists and key stakeholders defined a cardiac event, as it would present in the community setting, and then distilled current evidence-based guidelines for practice relating to these events (acute coronary syndromes, cardiac arrest, heart failure and life threatening arrhythmias) (Appendix 1) into a single patient care pathway, from which a master list of healthcare resources and services was derived.

In the second phase, 23 national datasets of health services and resources were acquired to model accessibility to cardiac services using a similar methodology to the modelling for the Accessibility and Remoteness Index of Australia (ARIA), Pharmacy ARIA, GP ARIA (GISCA 2004a) (Department of Health and Ageing & The University of Adelaide 2003) and previous work that measured accessibility to heart failure services (Clark et al. 2007a) (Figures 3 & 4). The third and final phase involved analysis of the cardiac ARIA index categories with key population groups (total, > 65, Indigenous) using ABS census data.

What are geographic information systems (GIS)?

Maps have been used as a public health tool for over 150 years (Johnson 2006). More recently, geographic information systems (GIS) technology and the increasing availability of health data, together with improvements in data collection techniques, have made it possible to develop a wide range of functions to enhance early mapping procedures. GIS (see Figure 5), with associated databases, allows data from a variety of sources to be linked to location using a process called geo-coding. GIS technology has been used extensively to map the spatial-temporal distribution of infectious diseases and to identify hotspots and clusters of disease activity. Recently GIS has been recognised as a valuable tool to assist in health services planning, but its undoubted potential for utilisation in healthcare is under-valued (U.S. Department of the Interior 2007).

(U.S. Department of the Interior 2007)

Aims and objectives

A unique feature of this project was the use of 'state of the art' GIS modelling technology, to determine the spatial distribution of CVD in relation to current cardiac care services.

Objective 1: Determine, by expert panel, the minimal services and resources required for the management of a cardiac event in any urban, rural or remote population location in Australia;
Objective 2: Derive a classification for each of Australia's 20,387 urban, rural and remote population locations based on its access to cardiac services.
Objective 3: Compare the Cardiac ARIA categories and population locations with selected census derived population characteristics.

The methods for the project have been structured around the objectives. The project was also conducted in three phases

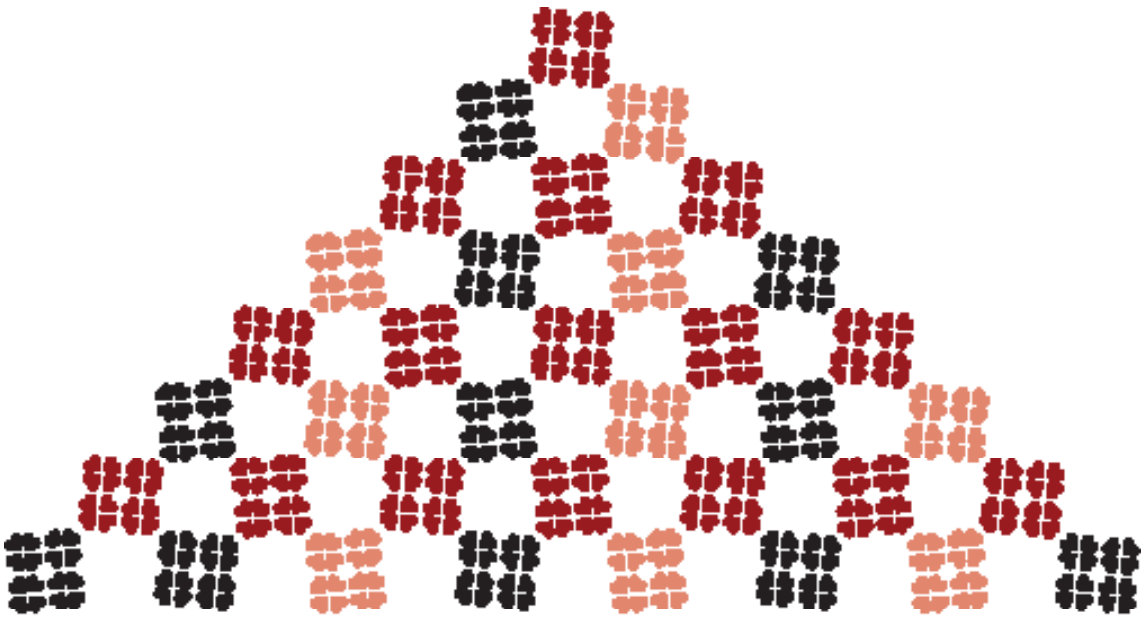
1. Expert panel consensus process;
2. Acquisition of data and GIS modelling;
3. Analysis of population based upon the Cardiac ARIA index.

APAI PhD and post doctoral scholarship

This project also provided extensive scope for scholarship. The outcomes of this project also included the work of an APAI PhD, and two post doctoral candidates under the supervision of the team who provided internationally renowned researchers, mentors and supervisors for this project.

METHODS AND RESULTS

Phase 1: Expert panel consensus process



Phase 1: Expert panel consensus process

Phase 1 of the project relates directly to Objective 1 of the project: to determine, by expert panel and consensus methods, what are the minimal services and resources required for the management of a cardiac event in any urban, rural or remote population location in Australia.

Objective

To provide a single master list of services and resources, based on a composite of the practice guidelines for a "cardiac event".

Context of the study

Implementation of the guidelines was to be set within all community settings with careful consideration given to the needs of populations (e.g. greater than 60 minutes from a CBD) in the urban fringes and rural and remote areas, and current literature

Once the master list was agreed upon, datasets with location information were sourced and applied to GIS software. The Cardiac ARIA index was developed by locating CVD services and resources within a population centre and then calculating the distance/time needed to travel by road to each CVD service (see the methods section for more detail). Distance by air (rotary and fixed wing aircraft) was also calculated, though not used in this version of the Cardiac ARIA index. Each population centre was assigned an index for CVD accessibility. The index described services which are currently available according to accepted best practice.

Key definitions

For the purposes of this project the following key definitions were defined by our expert panel:

"Expert"

The experts for our project were practicing cardiologists and members of the Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand, and leaders in Australian cardiac guideline development, research and practice.

"Stakeholder"

A clinician or service provider involved in the continuum of care along the management pathway of a "cardiac event".

"A cardiac event that requires medical intervention"
These cardiovascular events can include (but are not exclusive too):

- Chest pain;
- Collapse;
- Loss of consciousness;
- Severe dyspnoea;
- Syncope;
- Sustained palpitations with light –headedness.

"The scope of the project"

The scope of the project included: the occurrence of these "events" anywhere within the community setting, and followed the continuum of cardiovascular care extending from the initial event until the person returned to their community (from the emergency call for an ambulance to discharge and rehabilitation; Figure 6).

"Service and Resource"

A minimal service not only included obvious indicators that would facilitate appropriate and timely cardiovascular care such as a defibrillator, a doctor or an ECG, but may also include the facilities that would enable contact with these services such as a road, an airstrip or communication systems. GIS was used to model and rank those services that were critically "TIME" dependent. The list of services and resources was derived from the following Australian and international evidence based guidelines for management of cardiovascular disease obtained from the CSANZ and the Heart Foundation:

(With permission Lancet 2011)

The experts for our project were defined as practicing cardiologists and members of the Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand and leaders in Australian cardiac guideline development, research, practice and implementation working in groups, pairs or individually (Table 1). The members of the Cardiac ARIA expert panel met four times in person and by teleconference over the duration of the project period. Counsel was also sort from various members of the expert panel on a one to one basis during the model development and testing period of the project.

Methods

Consensus methods were used by an expert panel to define the context of the project, a cardiac event and a master list of services and resources (based on key guidelines) for the management of a patient along a single pathway from community to medical care and back to the community.

The aim of consensus methods is to determine the extent to which experts or lay people agree about a given issue (Perry 1987; McGlynn, Kosecoff & Brook 1990). The three best known consensus methods are the Delphi process, the nominal group technique (also known as the expert panel), and the consensus development conference (Perry 1987; McGlynn, Kosecoff & Brook 1990). Our project used the expert panel process.

There can be few hard and fast rules about who to include as participants, except that they must be an "expert" in the matter under discussion. Clearly, for studies concerned with defining criteria for clinical intervention, the most appropriate experts will be clinicians practising in the field under consideration. However, the inclusion of other clinicians such as general practitioners can be appropriate to provide an alternative clinical view, particularly when the study is expected to have an impact beyond a particular specialist field. When the discussion concerned matters of general interest, such as health service priorities, opinion was sought from The Heart Foundation (Perry 1987; McGlynn, Kosecoff & Brook 1990).

This project also utilised the nominal group technique which used a highly structured meeting to gather information from relevant experts (usually 9 to 12 in number) about a given issue. It consisted of two rounds in which panellists rated, discussed, and then re-rated a series of items or questions. This method was developed in the United States in the 1960s and has been applied to problems in social services, education, government, and industry. In the context of health care the method has most commonly been used to examine the appropriateness of clinical interventions (Perry 1987; McGlynn, Kosecoff & Brook 1990).

Results

The expert panel worked in groups or individually to translate the guidelines to health services and resources lists to form the composite master list. The master list of services and resources then became the basis for sourcing and capturing datasets, for modelling accessibility to cardiac services in phase two of the study methods (Table 2).

The master list for data acquisition identified 20 (Appendix two) national datasets of health services and resources required to model accessibility to cardiac services using a methodology based upon the Accessibility and Remoteness Index of Australia (ARIA) developed by GISCA at the University of Adelaide, 1996.

This phase of the project took approximately two years to complete. Unfortunately this exercise highlighted that many guidelines had detailed WHAT should be done during a cardiac event but detail was lacking on the HOW, WHERE and WHEN. With the exception of the cardiac arrest and ACS guidelines, time-frames and research based time outcomes were not commonly included in the recommendations for practice. The expert panel decided that the cardiac arrest/ACS timeframes would be applied generally to the Cardiac ARIA model, which resulted in a model built to reflect the "golden hour" (Boersma et al. 1996).

There were challenges in translating the recommended practices to services available outside of large cities. Guidelines often begin and end at the tertiary hospital door. Access to telecommunications, roads, GPs, pathology and cardiologists are not always guaranteed in rural and remote areas of Australia.

Translating the guidelines to minimal services and resources were complicated by differences in philosophical paradigms (medical and geographers). The expert panel were very conservative in their approach due to the political implications of this work. Geographers did not always understand why simple geographic access pathways could not be applied directly to patient care pathways. A positive outcome of this phase of the project was that our expert panel learned more about the use of, and potential for, GIS in health service research and modelling, and our team of geographers are now well trained in evidence based practice in response to a cardiac event.

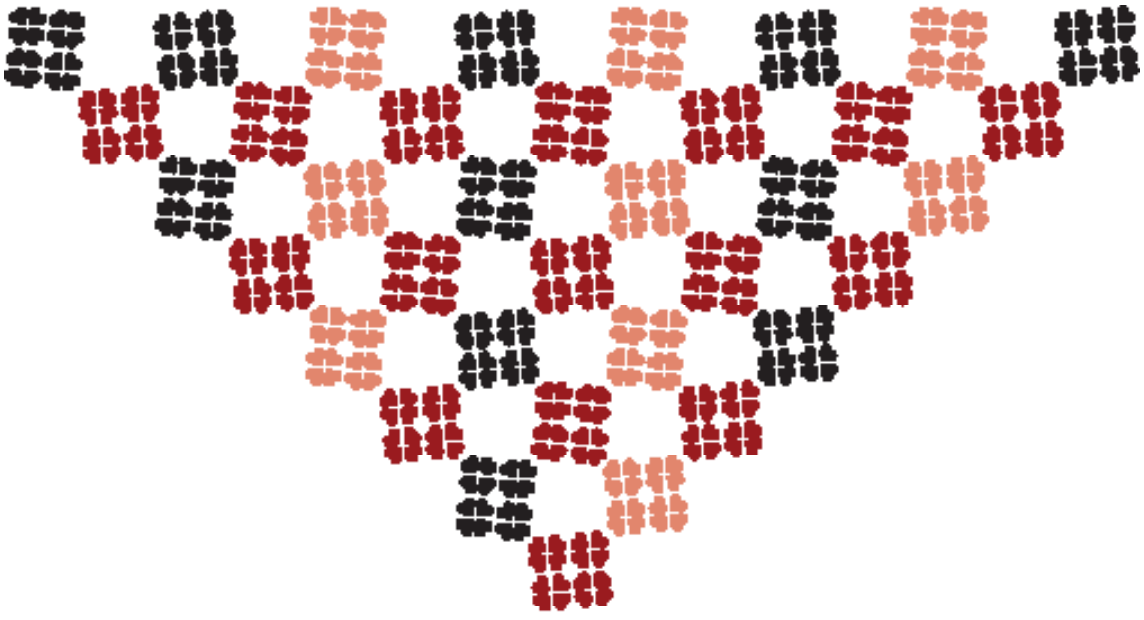
METHODS AND RESULTS

Phase 2: Data acquisition and GIS modelling



Phase 2: Data acquisition and GIS modelling

Phase 2 of the project relates directly to Objective 2 of the project: to derive a classification for each of Australia's 20,387 urban, rural and remote population locations based on its access to cardiac services.

Introduction

Ultimately, this project aimed to provide data to better advocate and plan for equitable cardiovascular services for all Australians affected by CVD in the short and longer-term using GIS.

The GIS software utilised for this project was ESRI ArcMap Version 9.3.1, with all of the data conforming to Australian Lamberts Conformal Conic projection, Geocentric Datum of Australia 1994 (ESRI Arcview 2011; ESRI Software 2011).

Measuring access using GIS

The underlying principle of geographic access and remoteness models is the impact distance plays in assisting or hampering access to goods and services. Accessibility is the ease of access of one location from another, and remoteness is being distant or far away geographically. These concepts are at the heart of geographic models of accessibility. Accessibility can be defined as "the ease of approach to one location from other locations, measured in terms of distance travelled, the cost of travel, or the time taken" (Higgs, Smith & Gould 2003). This definition refers to physical accessibility, it does not refer to social accessibility which could include class structure, income, age, education, gender or ethnicity, and the impact these factors can play in accessing services. Physical accessibility or geographic accessibility is the underlying basis of the accessibility methodology developed in this project (Phillips et al. 2000; U.S. Department of the Interior Geological Survey 2007).

Until recently, the Rural, Remote and Metropolitan Areas classification (RRMA) was the predominant remoteness classification used in Australia, although several earlier attempts to define rural and remote areas laid the foundation for later approaches (Department of Health and Ageing 2005). RRMA was developed in 1994 by the then Departments of Primary Industry and Energy and Human Services and Health because of concerns at the Commonwealth Department of Health about the level of health service provided to rural and remote areas (Department of Primary Industries and Energy and Department of Human Services and Health 1994). RRMA defined remoteness in terms of 'distance' factors based on a straight-line (Euclidean or 'as the crow flies') between the centroid (or centre most point) of a statistical local area (SLA) and the centroid of the nearest service centre, in addition to a 'personal distance' factor based on population density. Although the release of RRMA was significant, over time a number of limitations with its application became apparent such as its use of Euclidean distances rather than established networks, its reliance on SLAs, use of the word rural, and inclusion of a personal distance factor (Department of Primary Industries and Energy and Department of Human Services and Health 1994). These issues and others, more notably RRMA's increasing incompatibility with recent policy and analysis particularly at the town level, provided the impetus for the development in 1997 of a new Australian geographic remoteness index the Accessibility Remoteness Index Australia ARIA (Department of Health and Aging 2005). ARIA has replaced RRMA and has been modified to measure all essential community services (Commonwealth Department of Health and Aged Care 2001).

Cardiac ARIA is based upon the accessibility concepts used to develop ARIA in that it calculates distance along the road network from all 20,387 population locations across Australia to the geolocated cardiac services and resources identified by the expert panel. Similar to the ARIA index, Cardiac ARIA can then be aggregated to any other area unit such as a local government area, statistical local area, postcode, census collection district or any other user defined catchments. This will allow the incorporation of population data for any of these areas to be included, so that estimates of population at risk can be easily calculated (Department of Health and Ageing & The University of Adelaide 2003).

The development of the Cardiac ARIA model involved several key steps:

- Identification of key data (See expert panel section)
- Data Sourcing;
    - Data collection
    - Cleaning data
    - Data validation
    - Creating nationally consistent datasets
    - Geo-referencing the data
- Test modelling and validation
- Final model.

GIS modelling

The GIS methodology used to calculate both the acute and aftercare Cardiac ARIA uses raster based cost-distance mapping to generate cost distance layers for each input layer and the raster calculator to combine the layers into the final ARIA indices using ESRI's Arc Map, version 9.3.1. A raster layer is typically a two dimensional array of grid cells with a uniform cell size with a single value stored in each cell. The grid raster layer covers the area of interest and provides a cell value for each cell. Cost-distance analysis is widely used to calculate the cost (in this case cost = distance) of a single feature along a pathway (road network) and a single value for each cell in the raster layer. For Cardiac ARIA the cell size was set at 200 metres and a separate raster layer was calculated for distance from ambulance stations, distance to each hospital peer classification, GPs, pharmacies, rehabilitation services and pathology laboratories. These layers were then processed using the ESRI raster calculator and dispatch and scene times were added to create the single ARIA output.

Data sourcing

Cardiac ARIA required a significant amount of detailed data, and sourcing these data for this project was a major undertaking (Table 2).

These data included context data such as the road network for Australia and population locations, to detailed data on the location of ambulance stations, hospitals, cardiac units etc. For a detailed list of all data collected and their sources for this project see Appendix 2.

Data were supplied in many formats from many agencies around the country, including spatially referenced data (GIS databases) and more traditional data such as spreadsheets, text tables, books, manuals, departmental reports, emails, web sites and personal communications.

The initial data requirements for the project were driven by guidance from the expert panel and the experience of GISCA, The University of Adelaide in its work developing the Accessibility Remoteness Index Australia in conjunction with the Commonwealth Department of Health and Ageing 1999 (Department of Health and Ageing & The University of Adelaide 2003).

As Cardiac ARIA is a road time and distance based geographic model, two of the key data sets are the road network for Australia and population locations. Accessing these data is possible free of charge from Geoscience Australia. However, as these two datasets are fundamental to creating the index, it is imperative to have the best and most current data. The road network must be connected to ensure the model includes all parts of Australia, and the population centres must be up to date to account for newly developed/ developing areas. In addition to the road and population locations, the index also required the location of hospitals (plus rural and remote medical facilities), ambulance stations, general practitioners, retail pharmacies, pathology and cardiac rehabilitation services (Table 3). Onsite emergency care data, air transport and cardiologist workplace data were also collected, but ultimately not used in the building of the Cardiac ARIA index.

The process of capturing, cleaning, validating and collating these data is described in the following section. Given the extent of the data sources from a variety of agents, the collation of a national dataset for some of these data is in itself a significant outcome. This project provides an opportunity to build upon this work to use in other health based accessibility indexes.

Context data

Australia

The digital boundaries of Australia's States and Territories were sourced from the Australian Bureau of Statistics' Australian Standard Geographical Classification (ASGC) database (Australian Bureau of Statistics 2006a). This dataset was chosen in preference to Geoscience Australia digital boundary data, as it contains finer detail. The ASGC covers Geographic Australia including the external territories of Cocos (Keeling) Islands & Christmas Island, but excludes all other external territories.

The Cocos Islands, Christmas Island, Lord Howe Island and Norfolk Island are not included in this analysis due to their distance from mainland Australia. The total area of Australia is almost 7.7 million km^2.

To provide an understanding of the vast areas of Australia that are both remote and sparsely populated, especially for non-Australian users of Cardiac ARIA, the Australian Bureau of Meteorology's climate classification zones (Stern, de Hoedt & Ernst 2000) were obtained (Figure 7).

The majority of the country's population of approximately 21 million live in the temperate and sub-tropical regions. Remote deserts and grasslands occupy 70% of Australia (almost 5.5 million km^2), but are of limited agricultural value.

Population locations

Population location was one of the key datasets required for this project. The Cardiac ARIA index is based on measurement of the time (distance multiplied by speed) it takes to get to various facilities and services from each locality around the country. It is therefore imperative that the data be up to date to account for newly developed/developing areas.

There were two possible sources for this data. First, the Australian Government's free GEODATA TOPO 250K Series 3, National Topographic Database (NTDB) (Geoscience Australia 2006) is a 1:250 000 (250K) digital geo-database, provides seamless coverage of topographic data across Australia. This database contains two sources of location data, but have their limitation. For example, the Populated Places layer contains 1,681 localities, but does not include separate suburbs within towns and cities. The Placenames layer has almost 20,000 localities, but many of these records are not population centres (they are tourist attractions, shopping precincts, mountain ranges, lagoons, deserts, power stations etc.). Many towns and suburbs are also missing from the Placenames layer.

Secondly, Pitney Bowes Business Insight Pty Ltd is the largest commercial distributor of digital spatial data products in Australia. The Localities layer in their StreetPro Australia database (Pitney Bowes Business Insight 2009e) contains over 20,000 points nationally, representing locations of cities, towns, suburbs, and smaller settlements. As a comparison, there are 673 locations in the StreetPro database which fall within Sydney's urban centre location (UCL), but only 275 in the Geoscience Australia Placenames data (Melbourne UCL - 361 versus. 263). The geographic positioning of the StreetPro localities was also more accurate than GEODATA TOPO and comprehensive and thus, this data was used for the Cardiac ARIA modelling.

The StreetPro Australia database was supplied to the project, by Pitney Bowes Business Insight's South Australian reseller, Tonkin Consulting. Source data was supplied by PSMA Australia Ltd from their Point of Interest (POI) dataset, and value added by Pitney Bowes Software. The spatial accuracy of town points was improved by positioning points at the approximate town centres deduced from StreetPro street centreline data. Points representing suburbs are generated from centroids of the Pitney Bowes Software suburbs and localities dataset. Locality name attribution is based on original data from PSMA Australia Ltd, with corrections from user feedback. All settlements recognisable from interpretation of cadastre or street data are included in this dataset (Pitney Bowes Business Insight 2009c).

The StreetPro Australia database of 20,491 records was checked for duplicate records (the same name, state and postcode). The geographic location of each set of duplicates was checked, with most being only metres apart. One record for each set of duplicates was kept. A number of remote Aboriginal locations (which have medical clinics) were missing from the StreetPro database, and records for these 39 localities were added. Localities in the Cocos Islands, Christmas Island, Lord Howe Island and Norfolk Island were excluded from further analysis, as were 23 localities in the water (harbours, seas, straits), resulting in 20,387 records for modelling (Figure 8).

Although Australia has scarcely more than two persons per square kilometre of total land area, this raw figure is highly misleading. Australia is one of the world's most urbanised countries. Like the USA, the majority (80%) of the Australian population live within urban areas. The population is concentrated in the temperate and sub-tropical regions along the east and south-east seaboard, and south-west Western Australian (Figures 7 and 8).

Remote Australia covers over three-quarters of the Australian continent, but is inhabited by just over 2% of the population. As well as an extreme climate and poor agricultural conditions, it is characterised by geographic isolation, cultural diversity, socio-economic inequality, resource inequity, and Indigenous health inequality. Those living and working in remote Australia include Indigenous Australians, generational station farming families, transient mine workers, short- and long-term professional people, industry employed people, along with seasonal and tourism workers (Margolis & Ypinazar 2009). In the 2006 Census, Australia's deserts and semi-arid grasslands contained 6 towns with a population between 20,000 and 30,000, 100 other settlements with over 1,000 people and a further 150 population centres with up to 200 people. The remainder of the population were living in hundreds of smaller Aboriginal communities and outstations, and on pastoral properties (Turner, Ostendorf & Lewis 2008). Few healthcare services exist in remote Australia, with the distance to the nearest facility often measured in hundreds of kilometres, and travel times in multiple hours. Emergency transport for more remote locations is typically limited to fixed-wing, long-distance aircraft (Margolis & Ypinazar 2009).

Roads

Cardiac ARIA is an index measure of time/distance to facilities and services via the road network, as opposed to straight line distance which has been used in earlier attempts to measure accessibility in Australia (DPIE/DHSH 1994). Any modelling based upon road distance requires the best available road network spatial data set. The road network must be connected to ensure the model includes all parts of Australia.

The StreetPro Australia database by Pitney Bowes Business Insight's was used to obtain data on roads (Pitney Bowes Business Insight 2009e). The Street Centrelines layer contains a graphical representation of street centrelines and corresponding attribute data, derived from a composite of state/territory datasets. The primary source of the data is the Public Sector Mapping Agency's (PSMA Australia Ltd) Transportation dataset and G-NAF (Geocoded National Address File). Pitney Bowes Software regularly value adds and updates the product using field captured data and user feedback. Completeness in terms of graphical representation and attribution varies with locality. In general, capital city areas are approximately 99% complete (existing streets and valid attribution), while rural and remote areas range from 80 - 90% (Pitney Bowes Business Insight 2009d).

For this project, all relevant roads (Table 4) were extracted from the Street Centrelines layer, a total of 18,980,676 kilometers (Figure 9). Paths, malls, pedestrian access, proposed roads, and construction lines were not included in this model.

Urban areas

To differentiate urban from non-urban areas for modelling travel speeds, the Australian Bureau of Statistics' urban centre locations (UCLs) were extracted from the Australian Standard Geographical Classification (ASGC) database (Australian Bureau of Statistics 2006a). Five small UCLs in the NT and one in WA were not used in the analysis due to the excessive size to population relationships (Santa Teresa, Mataranka, Daly River, Timber Creek, New Mapoon and Broome). These UCLs ranged in size from 100 to 1,200 km^2 (Broome in WA had a population of 17,350 and an area of 750 km^2).

The remaining UCLs cover a total of 25,000 km^2 (0.3% of the total land mass), one third of this comprising the State and Territory capitals.

Population

The 2006 Census data (Australian Bureau of Statistics 2006b) were obtained to link to the Cardiac ARIA model for population analysis based upon the census collection district.

In 2006 there were 19,813,080 million residents in Australia, with 13.3% aged 65 or over (Australian Bureau of Statistics 2006). Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples comprised 2.5% (453,429 people) of the total Australian population, with a median age of 21 years compared with 37 years for the non-Indigenous population (Australian Bureau of Statistics 2006). Table 5 shows the breakdown of the Total and Indigenous Population by Remoteness Area. Indigenous people comprised 16% of the total population in Remote areas, and 48% of the total population in Very Remote areas.

Onsite emergency care data

An attempt was made to source both the landline and mobile network coverage across Australia, as these data were identified as a fundamental datasets for the project. Unfortunately, access to telecommunications data was not possible, chiefly because it is considered "commercial in confidence". Data on public access defibrillators (PAD) was also sought, but the data acquired was incomplete. A complete dataset of First Responders was constructed, however differences in the operation of units across the country would have made it difficult to use in the modelling. The Royal Flying Doctor Service (RFDS) supplied data on Medical Chests in remote locations, but most could not be mapped at the detail required for this project and not used in the modelling (see Appendix 3 for details).

Acute medical care data

Patients may arrive at a medical facility for acute care by a number of means, via road by private vehicle (not the preferred means) or ambulance, or alternatively by air in either rotary or fixed-wing aircraft. This version of the Cardiac ARIA index, modelled transport by road via ambulance. Air transport travel distances were calculated, but were not used in the initial version of Cardiac ARIA.

Road ambulance services

Cardiac ARIA was constructed using the emergency call number (000 in Australia) as the means of accessing cardiac services which formed the basis of the time/distance modelling. Consequently, accurate ambulance station locations were crucial to the final Cardiac ARIA index. However, as ambulances are operated by State Government (as well as volunteer organisations), there isn't a single source for this data set (Appendix 2). To collect these data, a datasheet was prepared for each state and territory ambulance service, and they were asked to fill in details for each station, such as street address, type (e.g. station, mine based, MICA), volunteer/paramedic/intensive care paramedic, hours of operation, use of thrombolytic drugs, other drugs and therapies, plus other comments. The response rate was sufficient for this project, although not all the agencies completed all sections of the data sheet. Only the Queensland Ambulance Service listed the drugs and interventions for each level of qualification (paramedic, advanced paramedic, intensive care paramedic). In Victoria, the Metropolitan Ambulance Service, Rural Ambulance Victoria and the Alexandra District Ambulance Service were in the process of merging, which hampered the data collation exercise. The request for ambulance data also coincided with the swine flu (H1N1 Influenza) outbreak in 2009, further hampering time availability to fill in the data request. In addition, some of the services had a strict protocol for data requests, which delayed the requests for data and pushed the response outside the project timeframes for data collection. Others services were simply under-staffed, too small, and/or unable to dedicate staff to collate all the data requested for the Cardiac ARIA project.

In the original modelling framework it was envisaged that different types of ambulance services would get different weightings, but this was not possible due to the lack of consistent data across the country. As a result, a simpler approach was adopted, where all ambulance stations were treated equally, and a standard time/distance measure was used to calculate the time to travel to the patient (with different average speeds set for urban and non-urban roads), examine and load the patient and then transport to the nearest, most appropriate, medical facility.

The locality of all State and Territory 'official' ambulance stations were sourced from the ambulance services and public records (Appendix 2 and Figure 10). The location of 'bush ambulances' at remote hospitals and health clinics were identified in some (but not all) instances. These are usually four wheel drive vehicles with a stretcher in the back, driven by the local remote area nurse (RAN) or aboriginal health care worker, but they can be used for many purposes in the community. As this was an incomplete dataset, and they are not always available for patient transfer, these vehicles were not included in the modelling of the Cardiac ARIA index.

Further, for security reasons, the ambulance services would not supply ambulance station street addresses and suggested that most metropolitan ambulances were not sitting in the station waiting for a call, but were mobile when directed to an emergency. For these reasons, ambulance stations were spatially referenced to the locality centroids and the analysis was based on distances and time to the centre of each locality (suburb or town), rather than to actual street addresses.

There are four ambulance stations and three joint emergency service centres in the ACT, all with at least one 24/7 intensive care paramedic (ICP). The ACT response time target is eight minutes for priority one cases (immediate response under lights and sirens) within the urban area. If a patient is suffering a STEMI, thrombytics (Heparin & Clopidogrel) are commenced in consultation with the admitting officer of The Canberra Hospital, and the patient is transported directly to that facility (personal communication Therese Moore, ACT).

The Ambulance Service of NSW have 224 career stations, and 20 volunteer stations. In 2008-09 the median response time for potentially life-threatening cases was 10.27 minutes for the State, and 10.1 minutes for the Sydney metropolitan area (NSW Health 2009). Pre-hospital thombolysis is not standard practice, but a thrombolysis proof-of-concept project was developed and implemented with the Hunter New England Area Health Service in 2007-08 (Ambulance Service of New South Wales 2008).

St John Ambulance is responsible for seven stations in the Northern Territory, all of which have intensive care paramedics (ICP), but pre-hospital thrombolysis is not practiced. Yulara Community ambulance station is run by the RFDS with an ICP. The Groote Island ambulance station is run by a mining company, without the use of ICP's. Jabiru is also a mine based service, but has the support of registered nurses (RN) from the local health clinic. The delivery of ambulance services in other locations is the responsibility of the remote health clinic within that community, and vehicles are staffed by RNs from the local health clinics (personal communication Michael McKay, St John Ambulance NT). These clinic-based vehicles are not true ambulances, and were therefore not included in this analysis.

Queensland Ambulance Service (QAS) operates from 215 career ambulance stations and five mine sites. Sixty four of these sites had at least one permanent, full time operational ICP, and 11 of these have 24/7 coverage (at least five permanent, full time ICPs). Queensland was the first state in Australia to introduce a state-wide pre-hospital Cardiac Reperfusion Program (Marks 2008; Scuffham & Tippett 2008). It was individual to specific locations and based on hospital requirements and abilities. ICPs were qualified to provide the thrombolytic drugs, once they have faxed the results of a 12-lead ECG to the hospital, and been given the go-ahead. On the other end of the scale, there are 19 hospital-based Honorary Stations in rural, remote or isolated Queensland communities. These are usually a Remote Area Nursing Service, with ambulance response provided by Qld Health employees. There were also nine other Honorary Stations in small communities, served by trained community volunteers who act in a first responder role. None of these 28 Honorary Stations were included in this analysis. The remainder of the state is serviced by health clinics, First Responder Groups and QAS Field Officers.

South Australia Ambulance Service had 36 career and 67 volunteer ambulance stations, one co-located station, and a special operations team base. There were also ten non-amalgamated stations run by volunteers, and two mine based services. All emergency ambulance crews rostered within the Adelaide metropolitan area were skilled to at least paramedic level. Intensive care paramedics were based at 13 metropolitan stations, and 15 rural stations, while other ICPs have areas of operation rather than specific stations. SA Ambulance Service paramedics do not administer pre-hospital thrombolytic drugs. The remote Anagu Pitjantjatjara Yankunytjatjara communities of Iwantja (Indulkana), Mimili, Fregon, Pukatja (Ernabella), Amata, Pipalyatjara, Yunyarinyi (Kenmore), Nyapari and Watarru (http://www.nganampahealth.com.au/content/view/3/6/) each have a clinic vehicle with the word 'ambulance' written on the side, and a stretcher in the back. These vehicles would not meet a reasonable definition of an "ambulance", and are multipurpose within the communities (people transporter, hearse, shopping vehicle etc,). They are generally under the control of community chairs, with most registered in the Northern Territory (personal communication Hugh Grantham, SAAS).

The Tasmanian Ambulance Service operates from 48 stations throughout the state. Ten stations are staffed by permanent officers only. Twenty two stations are staffed solely by volunteers, with paramedic backup provided if required. In larger communities volunteers remain at the station when on duty; in smaller communities they often respond from home or work. Sixteen stations are staffed by a permanent officer and volunteers. These stations tend to be in regional towns; volunteers remain at the station when on duty. The average response time for an emergency case is ten minutes and 20 seconds. Tasmania is the only state with no charge or levy for ambulance use. There are ICPs in some stations, but they do not administer pre-hospital thrombolysis.

There were 74 metropolitan ambulance stations in Victoria. Fifty four operate 24 hours, seven days per week, the other 20 in the peak period between 07:00 and 22:30. In addition, there were 16 Mobile Intensive Care Ambulances (MICA), each staffed by two paramedics, and two single MICA paramedic responder teams. The MICA teams could administer intravenous vasoactive and antiarrhythmic drugs and perform tracheal intubation, but they did not administer thrombolytic drugs. There were a total of 125 ambulance stations in rural Victoria, 91 professional branches, 31 community and three seasonal branches. Rural Ambulance Victoria (RAV) implemented a pilot study of pre-hospital thrombolysis for patients with ST Elevation Myocardial Infarction (STEMI) in the Bendigo region, but the study was discontinued after 12 months as only one patient had received paramedic-administered treatment (Kerr et al. 2008).

Western Australia had 27 metropolitan (all career) and 166 country (15 career, and 151 volunteer sub-centres and sub-branches) ambulance stations run by St John Ambulance. They operated a single tier paramedic service, taking four years to obtain a Bachelor of Science (Paramedical Science) (personal communication Tony Ahern, CEO). Intensive care paramedics crew the Emergency Rescue Helicopter Service, but not other stations. The target response time for Emergency calls was 90% within 15 minutes, but during 2008-09 the actual figure achieved dropped to 88.1% due to increases in ramp time and activity growth (St John Ambulance Western Australia 2009). Some remote areas were served by hospital-based ambulances (e.g. Fitzroy Crossing, Halls Creek and Derby); clinic vehicles were not included in this analysis.

Air ambulance: Rotary and fixed-wing

It is not always feasible to transport patients by road, due to the distances involved or other special circumstances (e.g. lack of accessibility). In these circumstances, rotary (helicopter) or fixed-wing aircraft (airplane) are utilised. Air Ambulance services fly with different combinations of specially trained flight doctors, nurses and paramedics as required. Cardiac resuscitation drugs and narcotic analgesics are routinely carried along with non-invasive blood pressure monitoring, pulse oximetry, ECG monitoring and defibrillation. Advanced monitoring and therapeutic equipment equivalent to a hospital intensive care unit was frequently carried and used for critically ill patients.

The benefit of the helicopter is that it allowed rapid lift-off from the hospital or heliport to the patient location, with the ability to land almost anywhere without the required ground transport associated with fixed-wing transports. The benefits of the fixed-wing service are a faster air speed, longer distances that can be travelled without refuelling, and lower operating costs (Thomas et al. 1990). The condition of the patient, time, distance, costs, accessibility of the site, and availability of aircraft must be weighed up, when deciding which mode of transport to use. Both helicopter and fixed-wing aircraft can be inoperable in bad weather conditions, while fixed-wing aircraft are also reliant on the condition of landing grounds at any given time.

The location of helicopter aeromedical service bases was sourced from State and Territory ambulance services (Appendix 2 and Figure 11). These services can be subcontracted out to private helicopter companies (e.g. CHC Australia Pty Ltd., Australian Helicopters), community owned and operated services (e.g. CareFlight, Westpac Rescue Helicopter Service), or run by the State Government (e.g. Emergency Management Queensland, Victorian Police Air Wing).

The locations of all fixed-wing aeromedical bases were sourced (Appendix 2 and Figure 12). CareFlight also operate an international jet ambulance service from five locations (Perth, Darwin, Gold Coast, Sydney and Cairns), providing medical retrieval services anywhere in the world. This is a fee-for-service branch of the organisation, and is rarely used by the government. They were not included in our analysis.

The RAAF also contract five fully equipped CHC Australia helicopters, with complete night-time capability, at four RAAF bases (Tindal, Katherine, NT; Williamtown, Newcastle, NSW; East Sale, Gippsland, Vic; and Pearce, Perth, WA), that are called on very occasionally, if no other aircraft are available. A community funded, not-for-profit organisation, utilising RFDS medical staff, operates out of Mount ISA, but is not sanctioned by Queensland Ambulance Service. Other organisations, particularly at mining and oil production sites, have helicopters at their disposal. While these machines were not medically equipped, there may be medical staff onsite (personal communication Captain Pip Turner, HNZ Cougar).

The Royal Flying Doctor Service (RFDS) have been the main provider of fixed-wing aeromedical services in Australia since 1928. It operates in an environment with vast distances, low population densities, and a high number of Indigenous people (Margolis & Ypinazar 2009). The service provides primary response aeromedical retrieval between rural and remote cattle stations, remote mines, small hospitals, and Indigenous communities, as well as inter-hospital transfers. Aircraft are not always available however, as many are scheduled to attend remote area clinics on a regular basis. The Northern Territory Aerial Medical Service (NTAMS) now services northern NT, and Australian Aeromedical covers the Mackay region.

The Cardiac ARIA project sourced the locations of landing grounds and airports approved by RFDS as being suitable for their air-ambulances (Appendix 2 and Figure 12). These were supplemented with other Civil Aviation Safety Authority (CASA) licensed airports (any if which are suitable for the air-ambulance aircraft), sourced from the Geoscience Australia GEODATA TOPO 250K Series 3, National Topographic Database (NTDB) (Geoscience Australia 2006) (Appendix 2 and Figure 12).

Hospitals

Data on the location of hospitals was fundamental for the Cardiac ARIA project, and was integral to creating a service based geographic accessibility model. Not only was the location of hospitals important, but also the services available at each hospital, in particular those services identified by the expert panel (See expert panel (EP) section and Appendix 1).

The names and addresses of 767 public hospitals, and 252 private hospitals, were sourced from the Department of Health and Ageing (Figures 13 and 14).

In the absence of Medicare data, hospital service data was sourced from JPM Media's Hospital and Health Services Yearbook (Appendix 2) which included health information from over 5,700 hospital, aged care and healthcare establishments within Australia and New Zealand. It is the most comprehensive health related database publicly available and is updated annually through a survey and census data. JPM Media supplied their 2009 digital database free of charge.

The relevant records from JPM Media were linked with the Department of Health and Ageing list of 1,019 hospitals.

The following information was extracted for these hospitals where available:

- Number of beds;
- Accident & Emergency;
- Cardiac-catheter laboratory;
- Cardio-thoracic unit;
- Coronary care / Intensive care;
- Pathology;
- Pharmacy.

Hospital names and addresses did not always match exactly. The online database was manually cross-checked with each record, an extensive web-based search was undertaken to extract extra information from each State and Territory Health Department and the various Health Regions.

Other data were supplied by individuals and organisations, such as cardiac surgery and heart transplant hospitals, cardiac catheterisation laboratories, emergency departments in New South Wales, and echocardiography services (National Institute of Clinical Studies 2005) (Appendix 2).

Australian Heart Foundation (HF) staff cross checked all the hospital data once compiled. This was done on a state-by-state division cross referencing the information for each hospital using internal HF data, and external sources (government agencies, cardiology networks, hospital websites), as well as phone calls to many individual hospitals. HF divisions have varying staff levels, and therefore varying capacity to undertaken such a task. Due to limited resources, checking was prioritised by hospitals that were located in the main centres and likely to have cardiac catheter laboratories and those hospitals that had little or no information already recorded in the JPM database. In total, 60% of the hospital records were checked and updated.

Remote area clinics

Remote health professionals work in a variety of settings (railway, mining, pastoral, indigenous, outback towns, island, tourism). Remote area nurses (RAN) comprise over 50% of the health work force in remote areas. Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Workers make up 45%, and doctors and allied health professionals the remaining 5%. Around 75% of remote health professionals work in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities (http://www.crana.org.au/8-remote-health-professionals.html).

Alice Springs has the only Principal Referral Hospital in Remote or Very Remote Australia, and Mount Isa the only large regional hospital. There were 175 other State or Government managed small hospitals, multi-purpose services and primary health care clinics, and no private hospitals.

Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Services (ACCHSs) now represent the principal means for delivering primary healthcare to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples. They aim to deliver holistic, comprehensive and culturally appropriate health care to the Aboriginal community. There are over 140 ACCHSs throughout Australia, with more than 90% located in rural and remote areas, many located hundreds of kilometres from the nearest hospital. The National Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisation (NACCHO) is the national peak body representing the interests and affairs of ACCHSs (Shephard 2004).

ACCHSs vary considerably in size, infrastructure, resources, and the number of Aboriginal people they service, ranging from large multi-functional services employing several medical practitioners and providing a wide range of services, to small services without medical practitioners, which rely on Aboriginal health workers and/or nurses to provide the bulk of primary care services, often with a preventive, health education focus (National Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Organisation 2009). Aboriginal health workers who live and work in the local community provide a pivotal communication link between the community and non-Aboriginal professional staff at the health service.

For many of the services without resident medical practitioners, the RFDS run GP clinics (usually weekly to monthly, but more often in larger centres), as well as other specialist clinics (Appendix 2). RFDS medical officers also provide a 24 hour remote TeleHealth consultation service to people living, working and travelling throughout remote and rural Australia. Diagnosis may be made over the phone and treatment prescribed from a cache of pharmaceuticals in an RFDS Medical Chest (see Appendix 3). As already discussed the RDFD also provide air-ambulance services to these communities.

The localities of ACCHSs were downloaded from each state ACCHS website. The project also sourced the locations of Western Australia Department of Health Nursing Posts, and Northern Territory Department of Health and Families Remote Health Centres, as well as Victorian Remote Area Nursing Posts (Appendix 2). Like many of the ACCHSs, these centres are staffed by qualified nurses offering basic health care and treatment, with doctors visiting on a routine basis.

This resulted in a database of 139 remote clinics (Figure 15). Many have a mobile health team (often run by the RDFS) that travels to the varying outstations and cattle properties (usually weekly to monthly) to service the health needs of the workers and residents of these remote outback posts. Those services which are in a locality which also had a hospital and outposts were not included.

Acute medical facilities: Combining hospitals and remote area clinics

The Hospital and Remote Clinic datasets were combined to form the Acute Medical Facilities dataset, with only one facility per locality included. Where there was more than one medical facility in a given locality, the top level facility for that locality was used in this analysis (e.g. a hospital with a catheterization laboratory will always take precedence over a small hospital in the same locality, and any hospital takes precedence over a remote clinic). In all there were 812 localities with a hospital and/or clinic.

Classification of acute medical facilities

There were a number of difficulties encountered when assembling the hospital and remote area clinic data. These included the confusion over interpretation of terms used by different organisations, and the level of service offered as outlined below:

• Bed numbers listed for an establishment could include any combination of acute, day and residential beds, but was not always specified;
• Acute bed numbers were used as an indication of hospital classification, particularly if other information was missing;

• Accident and Emergency (A&E) could include a range of services from an emergency room for triage in a small hospital to a full emergency department open 24/7 (Department of Human Services 2007);

• Cardiac catheterisation facilities were not open 24 hours 7 days per week;

• The distinction between Intensive Care Unit and High Dependency Unit was sometimes blurred;

• Pathology ranged from a full 24/7 pathology service onsite, regular collection from a nearby laboratory, delivery to a laboratory when required, to Point-of-Care Testing;

• Pharmacy ranged from a full 24/7 pharmacy service onsite, a visiting pharmacist, to a supply of basic drugs onsite;

• Terms used to categorise hospitals vary enormously between the States, Territories, and individual health regions, posing difficulties when attempting to compare the level of service offered by hospitals and other health care services. For establishments listed as Public Hospitals by the Department of Health and Ageing, terms used included, but were not limited to:

- Acute Hospital
- Base Hospital
- Bush Nursing Service
- Community Hospital
- District Health Service
- District Hospital
- General Hospital

- Health Campus
- Health Centre
- Health Clinic
- Major District Hospital
- Major Hospital Facility
- Major Medical Facility
- Multi Purpose Service
- Outpatients Clinic
- Primary Health Care Centre
- Principal Referral Hospital
- Principal Teaching
- Principal Tertiary Referral
- Public Hospital Section run by Private company for government
- Referral Centre
- Referral Hospital
- Regional Health Service
- Regional Hospital
- Regional Referral Hospital
- Rural Referral Hospital
- Secondary Level Hospital
- Sub Acute Hospital
- Tertiary Hospital
- Tertiary Referral Hospital
- Teaching Hospital
- Rural Facility.

To overcome issues surrounding nomenclature, the project team decided to use a national classification of medical facilities entitled the 'Public Hospital Peer Groups' classification. The Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) worked with the National Health Ministers' Benchmarking Working Group (NHMBWG) and the National Health Performance Committee (NHPC) to develop a national public hospital peer group classification for use in presenting data on costs per casemix adjusted separation (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2000). The aim was to allow more meaningful comparison of the data than comparison at the jurisdiction level would allow. Hospitals were classified into broadly similar groups in terms of their range of admitted patient activity and their geographical location. The peer group classification is recognised as a useful way to categorise hospitals for other purposes, and has been used to present data from the National Hospital Cost Data Collection, emergency department occasions of service data, and elective surgery waiting times data (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2009).

The Peer Group classification does not apply to private hospitals. As a patient is far more likely to be brought to a public hospital in the case of an emergency, and private hospitals are often proximal to the closest public hospital (81% are within 10 km and none are more than 50 km away) (Figures 14 and 15), private hospitals were excluded from further analysis.

The 2007-08 Peer Group classifications (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2009) were added to the Cardiac ARIA project hospital database of public hospitals. They were slightly modified to form five categories for Cardiac ARIA modelling (Table 6 and Figure 17). Principal Referral was divided into hospitals that had catheter laboratories and those without. No distinction was made between hospital locations, and an extra class was added to include remote area clinics (which are not listed as Public Hospitals). A number of AIHW Peer Group classes, such as Psychiatric Hospitals, were excluded from analysis (Table 7). The number of Cardiac ARIA Public Hospital and clinic categories per area are defined in Table 8. Only the highest level hospital per locality was included, so the totals will be less than those in the AIHW report (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2009).

Aftercare data (Care after a cardiac event and return to community)

Based on the guidelines for secondary prevention to health services and resources, our project defined the minimal services required for a patient after a cardiac event to include;

- access to a general practitioner for monitoring and on-going management;
- a pharmacy for supply and to support the routine cardiac medication regime;
- access to a cardiac rehabilitation and secondary prevention program with cardiologist follow-up.

• General practitioners

In Australia the burden of post-discharge care for people living outside of capital cities is predominately the responsibility of community-based general practitioners (Clark RA et al. 2007c). The MapInfo Business Points Australia database for 2009 from Tonkin Consulting and Pitney Bowes Business Insight Pty Ltd (Pitney Bowes Business Insight 2009a) was utilized for location data for general practitioners. This is a relatively comprehensive database containing geographic points of approximately 500,000 business locations in Australia, and corresponding information about those businesses. The data was sourced from InfoBase ® Business © 2009 Acxiom Australia Pty Ltd (Pitney Bowes Business Insight 2009b). This is a commercial database, not obtaining official government records and was the best available data in the absence of Medicare data.

The 10,537 records (in 2,321 different localities) from the Business Points database General Practice Medical Services were extracted and the number of records for a given locality ranged from one to 157. As it was impossible to check each record, a number of data processing rules were established. Records with obvious titles such as 'Medical Centre', 'Medical Clinic' or 'Medical Practice' in the company name were examined first. Those that could be identified as specialists from the company name (e.g. sports injuries, dermatology, cosmetics, muscular skeletal etc.) were excluded. All others were assumed to be a genuine GP (General Practitioner) service and were added to the GP Localities file. Next, records with 'Dr.' in the company name were examined and again added to the GP Localities file, after obvious errors were excluded. The company name of all other records was checked, and obvious errors excluded (specialist services, association headquarters etc.). Records with a simple person's name were assumed to be a GP service.

During cleaning and checking of the database, only one record per locality was added to the GP Localities file, resulting in 2,262 records (Figure 18). A small number of the localities (59) in the original dataset were discarded as not having any genuine GP service listed. While efforts were made to ensure the data supplied was complete, it was not possible to account for GP services that were missing from the database. The model could be improved with Medicare data, and this is an area for future refinement. The GP, Remote Area Clinic and Hospital datasets were combined to form the Aftercare Medical Facilities layer. No weighting was given to these records, but one record was included for each locality that had any of these medical facilities. Overall, there were 2,634 localities that included a GP, Clinic or hospital (Figure 19).

Retail pharmacies

Most acute coronary syndrome patients are prescribed an average of six to nine medications on discharge from hospital (National Heart Foundation of Australia and the Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand 2006). Access to a pharmacy is therefore vital.

To obtain pharmacy locality data, the Business Points Australia database for 2009 was again utilized for these data (Pitney Bowes Business Insight 2009b).

The 4,782 records (in 2,165 different localities) in the Business Points database listed under "Pharmaceutical, Cosmetic and Toiletry Retailing" were extracted. The number of records for a given locality ranged from one to 39. It was impossible to check each individual record, but like the GP data, a number of data processing rules were established. Records with 'Chemist' or 'Pharmacy' in the company names were assumed to be genuine retail pharmacies, and added to the Pharmacy Locality File. The company name of all other records were checked, and obvious errors excluded (such as hair and beauty, cosmetics, head offices, manufacturers etc.). Over 100 remaining records were checked individually, using the Pharmacy Guild of Australia's 'Find a Pharmacy' internet search engine, using on company name and address (The Pharmacy Guild of Australia 2010).

After validating and cleaning the database, there were 2,024 localities with a retail Pharmacy (LC) (at least one genuine Retail Pharmacy LC outlet per locality, Figure 20). While every effort was made to ensure the data supplied were complete, it was not possible to account for any pharmacy which was missing from the database.

While it was preferable to have a retail pharmacy in a locality, there are many areas that without this service, Andrew Roberts believes he is the only pharmacist in Australia that lives and works in an indigenous community http://bitethedust.com.au/bitingthedust/2010/03/04/shock-and-awe-2/. Under Section 100 of the National Health Act, remote Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health Services can order PBS medicines in bulk through retail pharmacies and dispense to patients as needed. The dispensing usually occurs without the direct involvement of a pharmacist, although some health services have a visiting pharmacist. An on-site pharmacist can provide education, clinical advice and on-site home medicine reviews, as well as improve the skill of everyone else on the team. On the other hand, in other rural areas the local GP may have dispensing rights. These non-retail services were not modelled in this version of Cardiac ARIA.

Cardiac rehabilitation facilities

Follow-up care, after a cardiac event, is an important element in the long-term survival from cardiovascular disease, and a major part of this aftercare includes rehabilitation services. The broad aims of cardiac rehabilitation are to:

- Maximise physical, psychological and social functioning to enable people with cardiac disease to lead fulfilling lives with confidence
- Introduce and encourage behaviours that may minimise the risk of further cardiac events and conditions (National Heart Foundation of Australia & Australian Cardiac Rehabilitation Association 2004).

The World Health Organisation and the National Heart Foundation of Australia recommend that cardiac rehabilitation be available to all patients with cardiovascular disease (World Health Organization Expert Committee 1993; National Heart Foundation of Australia & Australian Cardiac Rehabilitation Association 2004). Multidisciplinary hospital- and community-based programs of group light-moderate exercise, combined with education and discussion, have become the predominant model throughout most of Australia (Jelinek & Bunker 2007).

There are three phases of cardiac rehabilitation, Phase 1 - inpatient; Phase 2 - early convalescence, immediately after hospital discharge; Phase 3 - later maintenance programs. In this version of Cardiac ARIA, the team sought data on the location of Phase 2 cardiac rehabilitation services in Australia. Data were sourced from the Australian Cardiovascular Health & Rehabilitation Association (ACRA). Each state provided a list of their programs (331 localities in total) (Figure 20).

The quality of these programs varies enormously, ranging from individual to group sessions, full-time to occasional programs, clinic or home based, with or without educational sessions, with or without separate Heart Failure programs, with or without specialists such as a dietician, exercise physiologist, specialist nurse, pharmacist, physiotherapist or occupational therapist.

Pathology laboratories

Cardiac biomarkers (e.g. troponin or BNP) are widely used in assessing patients with suspected acute cardiac events. Tests must be available to the doctor 24 hours a day, 7 days a week with a rapid turn-around-time. Some of the tests may be performed at the point of care (in the emergency room or at the patient's bedside). Point-of-care testing (PoCT) can be particularly beneficial in rural and remote practices (Shephard 2004; Tirimacco & Tideman 2004). Once the patient returns to the community, ongoing pathology testing is also required to monitor progress.

Due to the absence of Medicare Australia data, the Australasian Association of Clinical Biochemists was contacted, (through their CEO Tony Prior), for sources of information on pathology laboratories and hospitals with point-of-care testing throughout the country. They suggested using the National Association of Testing Authorities' (NATA) web-based search engine (www.nata.asn.au). From this database it was possible to identify all NATA accredited laboratories which offered cardiac services (medical testing, chemical pathology). Each record was checked individually, as some were irrelevant (e.g. IVF pathology services). At some sites it was not possible to determine in all cases for 'blood gases, glucose and other profiles' was also recorded, but if these were cardiac related tests specifically (e.g. Troponin or BNP). Facilities with either chemical pathology and/or point-of-care testing for blood gases, glucose and other profiles were included in the modelling.

Rosy Tirimacco, Australasian Association of Clinical Biochemists (AACB) PoCT Chair and manager of the Integrated Cardiovascular Clinical Network SA (iCCnet SA) and member of our expert panel, also requested information from contacts in each Australian state. State health departments were also contacted as attemptes to approach other states for information proved unsuccessful. The only information obtained was from the iCCnet's survey of cardiology services in SA in 2008. Attempts to approach other states for information proved unsuccessful. Due to time constraints there was not enough time to source data.

Overall, a total of 444 pathology laboratories from 299 localities were extracted from the NATA online search engine and georeferenced (Figure 21). Of these, 180 had POCT, but again it was not possible to determine which tests were undertaken. Four sites specify Troponin testing specifically, and another three mention a cardiac reader. Non-accredited laboratories are not included in this version of the Cardiac ARIA model.

Pathology collection centres were not included in this version of Cardiac ARIA. These could be included in future analysis.

Cardiologist workplaces

An attempt was made to obtain data on the work location of cardiologists as for Cardiac ARIA Index. However, we were advised by the AIHW that this would be a difficult task. Despite this, the AIHW offered the postcodes for clinical cardiologists or cardiothoracic surgeons. The data used to build Cardiac ARIA are more spatially detailed than via postcodes, and therefore postcode data were not appropriate for this project. The Cardiac Society of Australia and New Zealand sent a short survey to members asking for a few details about locations of practices, however only 20 of 700 responses were received from CSANZ members. Results are not reproduced here due to privacy issues.

Test modelling and validation

Based on the input and feedback from the expert panel, the master list of desirable data was defined (Table 2). As discussed above, not all data sought was sourced, and not all data sourced was suitable for modelling. The master data list therefore only included the datasets actually used in modelling the Cardiac ARIA Indices (Table 3).

Acute Cardiac ARIA

Eight iterations of the Acute Cardiac ARIA Index were modelled (see Supplementary Report: Cardiac ARIA Modelling). There was a process of iterative testing to find the model which was the best fit for the guidelines and the data. There were a number of group discussions, and input from various members of the expert panel (on a one to one basis), during the model development and testing period of the project.

The earlier model iterations used different base assumptions, but were all calculated using the time taken to reach different classes of medical facilities by road ambulance. Some of these models included ambulance services as a medical facility in their own right, while others used them only in the calculation of the total time to reach other medical facilities. The earlier version of the model was constructed before the AIHW Peer Group Classification of Public Hospitals (Australian Institute of Health and Welfare 2009) was included in the analysis. Thus, attempts were made to classify the hospitals and remote clinics, based on a hierarchy of the level of cardiac services offered by each. Generally these were:

- Hospitals with a cardio-thoracic surgical units
- Hospitals with a cardiac catheterisation laboratory offering 24/7 PCI (percutaneous coronary intervention)
- Hospitals with ICU or CCU
- Other hospitals. Depending on the model, one of the following:
    - Hospitals with accident and emergency
    - Any other hospital
- Any Acute Care facility. Depending on the model, one of the following:
    - All hospitals + remote clinics
    - All hospitals + remote clinics + general practitioners
    - All hospitals + remote clinics + general practitioners + ambulances
- Once the Peer Group Classification was included, all models used this heirarchy.

Aftercare Cardiac ARIA

Three iterations of the Aftercare Cardiac ARIA Index were constructed. All the models measured 60 minute road travel time to:

- Aftercare medical facilities (hospital, remote area clinic or GP)
- Cardiac rehabilitation programs
- Pathology laboratories
- Retail pharmacies
- Different time formulas were used in the different models
- Different orders of priority were set for the facilities in some models.

Final model

Construction of the final Acute Cardiac ARIA Index and Aftercare Cardiac Index are discussed below. The Acute (numeric) and Aftercare (alphabetical) Indices were combined to produce the final numeric / alphabetical Cardiac ARIA Model.

Final Acute Cardiac ARIA

The final Acute Cardiac ARIA Index (Figure 22) was based on:

- The 'Golden Hour'
- Travel by ambulance
- Travel by road
- Time from triple zero call to arrival at hospital, including
    - Dispatch time
    - Travel time to scene
    - Time on scene
    - Travel time to hospital
- Classification of hospitals and clinics, based on the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare's (AIHW) 'Public Hospital Peer Groups'
- In general, use the BEST facility within one hour via ambulance (Figure 23)
- Because of the problem of remote clinics not being near an ambulance, and extra index category (category 7) was created, which does not include ambulance transport.

Calculating travel time by road ambulance

Cardiac ARIA was based on road distance and time as the basis, however it was not possible to obtain information from the state ambulance services on the average urban and rural travel speeds. While they are legally allowed to travel well above the speed limit when travelling to an emergency, it is often not possible to travel much faster than the normal flow of traffic. Drivers must still drive with due diligence, and slow down going through traffic lights, and through towns. We therefore took the conservative approach, and based our road speeds on normal average speeds.

VicRoads' performance bulletins show that average travel speeds on the Melbourne arterial road network have been hovering around 42 kph in recent times (Saggers 2005). The Los Angeles Metropolitan Transportation Authority (MTA) stated in its publication State of Traffic 2003, that average freeway speeds during morning peak have fallen to 37 mph (60kph). A project in New Zealand (Begnell 2004), modelling population access to public hospitals, calculated speed on sealed urban roads at 30 kph, urban motorways at 80kph, non-urban sealed roads at 40-80 kph depending on the type and 'bendiness', and non-sealed country road at 30-50kph.

Consequently, Cardiac ARIA road speeds were calculated at 40kph, non-urban road speeds at 80kph, and unsealed road speeds at 50kph (Table 11). The travel time from the nearest ambulance station was calculated for all of Australia (Figure 24).

Calculating total time to reach an acute medical facility

For each of the five Cardiac ARIA hospital categories, the time to reach the closest facility in each category by ambulance was calculated for the entire country. The time calculation includes four components:

- Dispatch time
- Travel time from closest ambulance station to scene
- Time at scene accessing and loading patient
- Travel time from scene to nearest hospital or remote clinic.

Dispatch time is the time interval between receipt of the emergency call and the ambulance being dispatched. A dispatch time of three minutes was chosen for Cardiac ARIA modelling, based on 2008-09 chest pain statistics obtained from The South Australian Ambulance Service (Tables 10 and 11).

Travel time to scene is the time interval between the closest ambulance being dispatched and arriving at the scene. See Figure 24.

Time at scene is the time interval between the ambulance arriving at the scene and departing again. During this time the patient is assessed and loaded for transport. Time at scene for Cardiac ARIA modelling was based on 2008-09 chest pain statistics from South Australian Ambulance Service (South Australian Ambulance Service 2010), and data on 28,298 chest pain calls (both urban and rural) to the Queensland Ambulance Service (QAS) in 2003 (Scuffham & Tippett 2008) (Table 10). Data were not available on the mix of volunteer and professional for all states. In the absence of these data, time at scene was based on the professional times for South Australia, 15 minutes in Metropolitan areas (defined here as the eight capital cities plus the other ARIA A cities - Gold Coast, Newcastle and Canberra-Queanbeyan) and 19 minutes in other areas (Table 11).

Travel time to hospital is the time interval from when the ambulance leaves the scene and arrived at the destination hospital. For each of the five Cardiac ARIA hospital categories, the travel time from the scene to the closest facility in that category was calculated for the entire country.

Other Urban	3 minutes	40 kph	19 minutes
Non Urban Road	3 minutes	80 kph	19 minutes
Non Urban Off-Road	3 minutes	50 kph	19 minutes

Dispatch time, time to scene, time at scene, and time from scene were summed to form the total time, from calling the emergency number to arriving at the nearest medical facility, for each of the five hospital classifications for all of Australia (Figures 25 to 29).

Calculating the Acute Cardiac ARIA categories

The output from these five calculations (total time to each hospital category) was used to produce the Acute Cardiac ARIA Index, as outlined in Table 12 and Figure 23. The results are displayed in Figure 30.

Final Aftercare Cardiac ARIA

The final Aftercare Cardiac ARIA Index (Figure 35 and Table 15) is based on:

- Travel by road
- Travel by private vehicle
- Time to a number of community based services for aftercare
- The order of importance of these services was determined with input from the the Expert Panel and the Heart Foundation. In descending order these are:
    - Medical follow-up
    - Retail Pharmacy
    - Cardiac Rehabilitation Program
    - Pathology Laboratory.

Calculating time to aftercare facilities

Travel speeds for the After Care Cardiac ARIA Index used the same road travel speeds as the Acute Cardiac ARIA (Table 12). Urban road speeds were set at 40kph, non-urban road speeds at 80kph, and off-road speeds at 50kph. For each of the four community based services, the time to the closest facility was calculated for the entire country (Figures 36-39).

Calculating the Aftercare Cardiac ARIA categories

The output from these four calculations (time to community based services) was used to produce the Aftercare Cardiac ARIA Index, as outlined in Table 15 and Figure 35. The results are displayed in Figure 40.

The complete Cardiac ARIA Model

The complete Cardiac ARIA model combines the Acute and the Aftercare Indices at each location, to form a Numeric-Alpha value for each locality (Table 16 and Figures 41-43). There are eight categories of acute care access and five categories of cardiac aftercare access. When the criteria are modelled using GIS to all population locations only 19 of the possible 40 combinations were identified.

The ranges of combinations that are in this version of Cardiac ARIA are shown in Figure 41. This outcome will be iterative as the distribution of facilities and services changes over time.

The characteristics of the populations located in these access categories are presented in the next section.

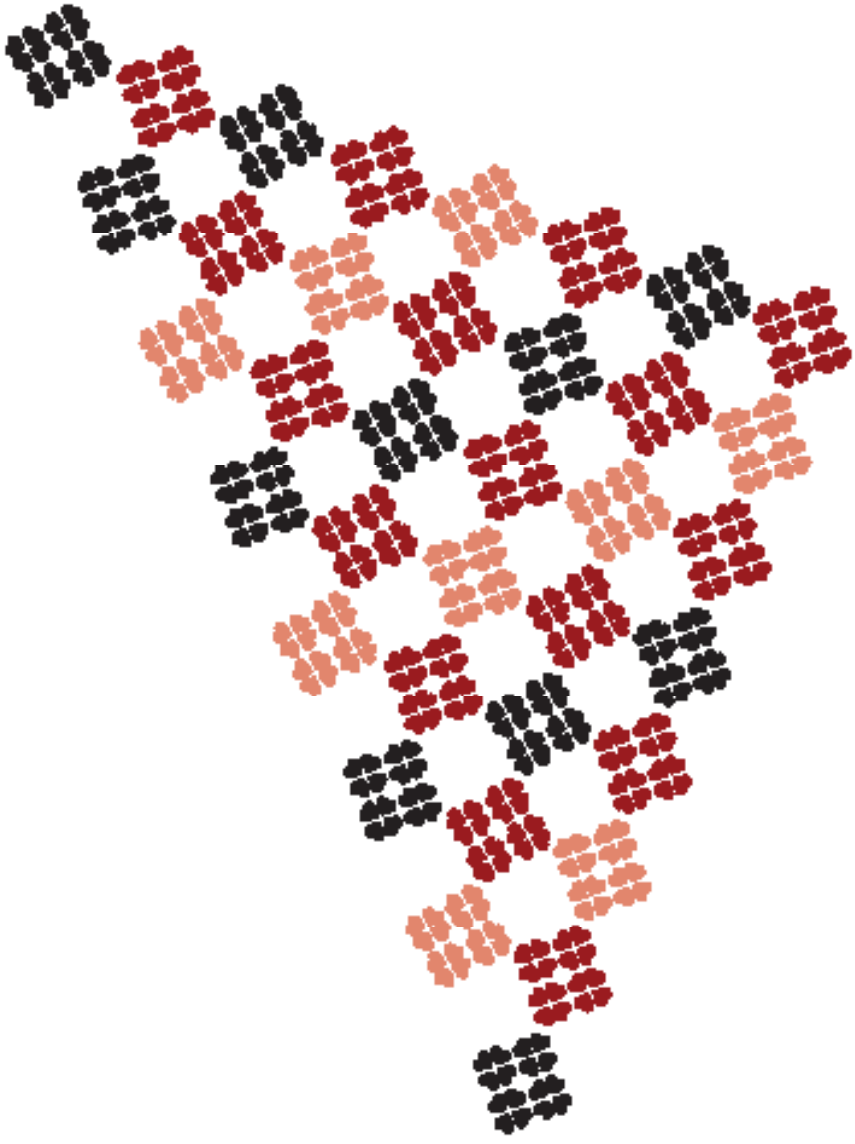
METHODS AND RESULTS

Phase 3: ABS population analysis



Phase 3: ABS population analysis

Phase 3 of the project relates directly to Objective 3 of the project: to map the type and location of cardiovascular services currently available in Australia, relative to the distribution of individuals with CVD.

In this phase of the study the Cardiac ARIA index was reviewed in the context of three CBD socio-demographic risk factors: rural and remoteness, age and Aboriginality. Detailed socio-epidemiologic, outcomes and risk factor analyses have been funded separately and will be presented in future publications

Cardiac ARIA Demography

Cardiac ARIA provides a locality based index of accessibility to cardiac services across Australia. As many localities are actually legally named localities or significant features, this does not provide an indication of the population associated with a given Cardiac ARIA score.

While many of the localities are populated, and therefore can provide users with a quick reference to a locality and the geographic access to cardiac services, other spatial data are required to provide the link between Cardiac ARIA and population outcomes. The Australian Bureau of Statistics collects the Census of Population and Housing every five years, and this provides the best possible source for associating Cardiac ARIA with actual populations.

The ABS collect population data using the census collection district (CD), which is the smallest spatial unit available for analysing Australia's population, with approximately 250 households per CD in an urban area, and fewer in rural areas. At the 2006 census there were 38,704 CDs in Australia, and these covered Australia without overlap or omission. The ABS CD is used in this section to provide population data for the three Cardiac ARIA indices.

In addition to a vast array of population and housing data, the ABS also produces a remoteness index, using the University of Adelaide, GISCA ARIA scores, to classify all CDs into five broad classes. For comparison purposes, Cardiac ARIA localities are presented with the underlying ABS CD remoteness score (Table 17).

Of more interest is the distribution of population relative to access to cardiac services. These data are displayed in Tables 18 to 20. As the older and indigenous populations are more at risk of suffering from cardiovascular disease, the indigenous population, and the population greater than 44 were included in these tables. As the populations are derived from the ABS 2006 census based upon the census collection district, Acute Cardiac ARIA, Aftercare Cardiac ARIA and Cardiac ARIA maps with CDs grouped by the respective ARIA values are included (Figures 45 to 47).

These maps were derived by calculating the average Cardiac ARIA value (Cardiac ARIA is constructed using a 200 metre grid) for each CD across Australia (Figure 44).

These maps highlight the issues of working with existing spatial boundaries, and the impact this has on the population data, as larger remote CDs with small areas of higher access are overwhelmed by larger areas of lower access.

The issue highlighted above is more clearly demonstrated with reference to the actual Cardiac ARIA indices and the derived collection district versions (Figures 45, 46 and 47). To create a population based version of the index necessitates building a collection district view of Cardiac ARIA, as there are no other sources of population data. However, the resulting CD based indices mask small areas of higher order accessibility in the remote parts of Australia. The actual impact of this is difficult to quantify, as there is no alternative means available for relating population characteristics with the Cardiac ARIA indices. This may change with the 2011 Census, which is moving to a smaller base spatial unit. However, the size of the spatial unit will still create problems in the more remote less settled parts of Australia, as the underlying basis for the ABS spatial units, is to include sufficient individuals/households to protect confidentiality. Consequently, there is some loss of detail in the more remote parts of Australia when relating the population data with the Cardiac ARIA values.

Population outcomes: Acute Cardiac ARIA

- In the advent of a cardiac emergency, the majority of Australians had very good access to cardiac services
- Approximately 71% or 13.9 million people lived within one hour of a category one hospital
- 68% of older Australians lived within one hour of a category one hospital
- Only 40% of indigenous people lived within one hour of the category one hospital
- 16% (74000) of indigenous people were one or more hours from any hospital or clinic
- 90,000 people 65 years of age or older lived one hour or more from any hospital or clinic.

Population outcomes: Aftercare Cardiac ARIA

- The majority of Australians had excellent geographic access to cardiac aftercare services
- Approximately 96% or 19 million people lived within one hour of the four cardiac aftercare services
- 96% of older Australians lived within one hour of the four cardiac aftercare services
- 75% of indigenous people lived within one hour of the four cardiac aftercare services
- 14% (64000) of indigenous people had poor access to cardiac aftercare services
- Access to cardiac aftercare does not equate to usage.

Population outcomes: Cardiac ARIA

- The majority of Australians had good access to cardiac services
- Approximately 71% or 13.9 million people lived within one hour of a category one hospital and all four cardiac aftercare services
- 68% of older Australians lived within one hour of a category one hospital and all four cardiac aftercare services
- Only 40% of indigenous people had good access to a category one hospital and all four cardiac aftercare services

- 12% (56,000) of indigenous people were one hour or more any hospital or clinic and could only access one of the cardiac aftercare services (usually a remote area clinic).

It is evident from these maps that vast areas of Australia do not have timely access to cardiac services, but that these areas are also the more remote sparsely settled areas. The associated tables show that the populated parts of Australia have very good access to cardiac services. This section does highlight the poorer access the indigenous population has to cardiac services.

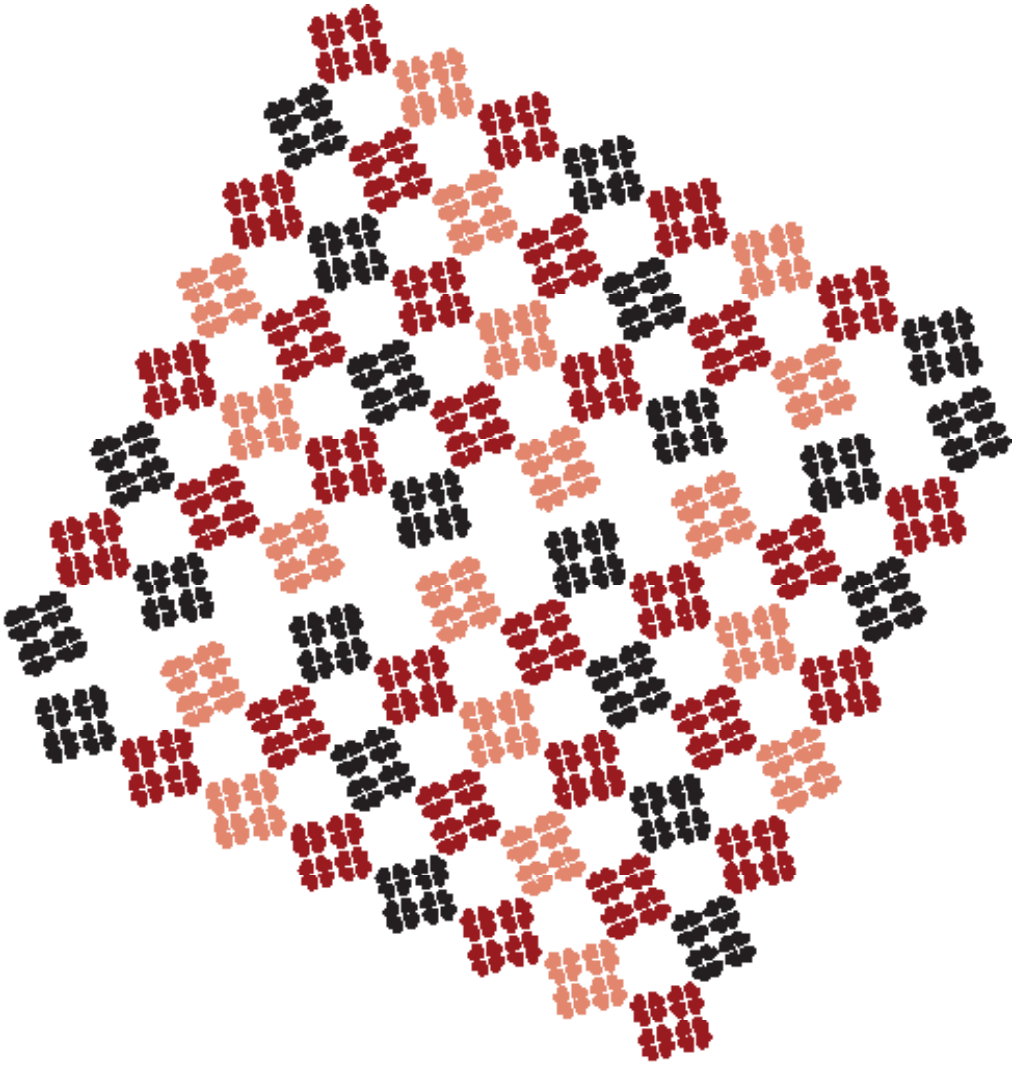
DISCUSSION



DISCUSSION

The pilot work that underpinned this project demonstrated accessibility to chronic heart failure (CHF) services (Clark et al. 2007). Of the 62 identified CHF management programs in 2004, 93% (58) were located in highly accessible areas (i.e., capital cities or metropolitan areas). The remaining four CHF management programs were located in accessible areas (i.e. rural towns or cities). No CHF management programs were located in remote areas, and there were no CHF management programs in the Northern Territory or Tasmania. Using the GIS technology, we calculated that the mean distance from any Australian population centre to the nearest CHF management program was 331.7 km (median, 162.7 km; range, 0.15–3246.3 km) (Clark et al. 2007) (See Figure 4).

From the original concepts described above, our team asked the question..."If this was the case for heart failure, what was the accessibility for all cardiac services?" ...and from this question Cardiac ARIA was conceptualised (Clark et al. 2007).

The innovative aspects of this research included the unique collaboration between clinicians and geographers to answer the research questions. The aim was to measure access to cardiac services using an unambiguously geographic approach to defining access.

To achieve these aims we adapted a method which had been used to measure accessibility in Australia, the Accessibility and Remoteness Index of Australia (ARIA)(Department of Health and Ageing & The University of Adelaide 2003). As well as the Chronic Heart Failure project referenced above, this accessibility model has also been applied in other contexts, such as accessibility to general practitioners (Bamford et al. 1999; GISCA 2004a), pharmacies (GISCA 2004c), aged care services and district nursing (Aylward, Hugo & Harris 2000; GISCA 2004b).

This project is also internationally significant, as a systematic review of the literature has revealed that, although aspects of access to cardiac services have been measured previously using GIS (i.e. access to cardiac catheterisation (McLafferty & Broe 1990; Brabyn & Skelly 2002; Alter et al. 2003; Hare & Barcus 2007; Buckley, Bates & Nallamothu 2008) (Nallamothu et al. 2006), or general access to cardiac services (Blustein & Weitzman 1995; Tu et al. 2003; Veugelers, Yip & Elliott 2003; Pearce, Witten & Bartie 2006; Hare & Barcus 2007; Buckley, Bates & Nallamothu 2008; Bungard et al. 2008; Graves 2008; Ong ME et al. 2008; Bungard et al. 2009), and studies measuring access have used simple Google maps and distance as the crow flies (Access Economics Pty Limited 2009)), no study to date has been ambitious enough to measure accessibility to all cardiac services underpinned by essential services such as telecommunications, roads, and ambulance coverage, and provide a measure of the outcome in the form of a weighting or index number.

A key driving force for the Cardiac ARIA team, was to make a contribution to improve heart health for all Australian communities by increasing the understanding of the distribution of cardiac services in relation to the distribution of the population and accessibility.

Cardiac ARIA is a potentially powerful tool for policy makers and researchers, to both highlight and combat the burden of cardiovascular disease in urban, rural and remote Australia, by classifying access to cardiac services in an objective, geographic way, which establishes a benchmark for practice.

Cardiac ARIA is focused on community access/support, as opposed to medical centred responses, and empowers communities to be proactive in taking a lead in improving access to cardiac services, based on the Cardiac ARIA index for their population location.

Cardiac ARIA demonstrates the "geographic" access to cardiac services, not the performance of the healthcare system. Therefore, it reflects what could or should happen…not what does happen". We intend that Cardiac ARIA will be iterative as data access improves.

Implications for practice

These results can be used to identify geographic hotspots where there is a mismatch between demand and provision of cardiac services. This report does not recommend cardiac catheterisation facilities should be located in every town. However, the Cardiac ARIA index identifies the rural centres that have sub-optimal access to cardiac services within the "golden hour" radius.

Inequities in access in rural areas will continue without system changes. The Cardiac ARIA index can be used to assess cardiovascular health service delivery against service requirements, or where systems are in place but perhaps not functioning synchronistically. For population locations with limited access to cardiac services, a case can be made for innovative practice to overcome the tyrannies of distance, such as thrombolytic drug rotation systems, and virtual or electronically supported cardiac care.

The Cardiac ARIA model also highlights the areas where innovative models of care may be required for secondary prevention (Aftercare Cardiac ARIA Index). For example

- the astute and practical application of point-of-care testing (POCT) can unquestionably be one of those inventive solutions in the broader context of improving rural cardiac healthcare delivery in both the acute and chronic clinical context" (Shephard 2004)

- delivering virtual cardiology services
- developing innovative systems for the administration and management of thrombolytics
- developing innovative models of care for access to secondary prevention.

Limitations

Due to constraints such as time, gate keeping of datasets, multiple and complex data definitions, and incomplete data availability, an Emergency Cardiac ARIA was not modelled as previously planned. Further funding and extension work from the project may result in this section of the model being completed and updated. Data regarding the emergency number (000 in Australia) coverage is of particular importance, as we are aware that there are still many areas of Australia that do not have good telecommunications access. Our project highlighted that there are hundreds of automatic external defibrillators within the community, with no custodian on location data, or governance for maintenance of safety and training. Despite the fact that the Australian Resuscitation Council (ARC) guidelines on PAD (Australian Resuscitation Council 2004) state that "Implementation of Public Access Defibrillation should be developed in partnership with local emergency medical services and provide for data collection and audit of events", this does not appear to be happening. Some of the state and territory ambulance services can enter the location of AEDs into their CAD (Computer Aided Dispatch) system, but only if they are made aware of them. While many Indigenous communities in central Australia now have AEDs (http://www.abc.net.au/news/australia/nt/alice/200510/s1473916.htm), our project was unable to access data on their location. When sourcing the location of Royal Flying Doctor Service (RFDS) Medical Chests, not all the data were made available at the level of detail required. In some states, RFDS did not wish the exact localities of these chests mapped publicly for security reasons. In addition, national consistency of terms and concepts for emergency responses (e.g. first responders) was a barrier, and more work is required to align these datasets.

Access to Medicare data would have made the model more reliable, robust and complete. While Cardiac ARIA is the most complete picture of cardiac services by location in Australia, it could have been improved with the inclusion of Medicare data. Hopefully, the experience with this project, and the importance of the results to service planning, will establish an easier path to Medicare data for future work of this nature.

Recommendations for future Cardiac ARIA

With further funding, future iterations of Cardiac ARIA could include an Air Transport model, measure accessibility to Private Hospitals, Cardiologist and more detail could be added and modelled on different levels of service provision (e.g., volunteer/paramedic/ICP and clinic based 'bush ambulances' (with or without thrombolytic). As alluded to earlier, the ability to include Medicare data would ensure a more reliable and robust model i.e. general pratitioners, pharmacies and pathology service data. Work closely with the Australian Cardiac Rehabilitation Association to map emerging models for secondary prevention of CVD.

Conclusion

Cardiac ARIA was designed to be an unambiguously geographic approach to defining access to cardiovascular services. A systematic review of the literature has shown that Cardiac ARIA is the first index of its kind internationally (Leduc & Creston 1997; Humphreys 2002; Patel, Waters & Ghali 2007; Cinnamon, Schuurman & Crooks 2008). Socio-economic, urban/rural and population factors were not considered for incorporation into the measure. Australia is a leader in research which attempts to quantify remoteness and accessibility to services (Wilkinson D 1999; Department of Health and Ageing & The University of Adelaide 2003). The lack of access to appropriate and timely healthcare in areas outside of major cities has serious implications for Australians where the demand for healthcare services is greater. This is particularly so for cardiac services. Equity of access to healthcare, regardless of place of residence, is a fundamental tenet of our society. It is therefore a particular task for cardiovascular healthcare providers in Australia to devise strategies to overcome these limitations (Richmond 2010). The outcomes of this project freely available on the World Wide Web in the hope that the index will be used in research and health service analysis to improve access to cardiac service and lead to improved CVD health for all Australians.

APPENDIX THREE: CALCULATING AIR AMBULANCE DISTANCES

Calculating air ambulance distances

While the Cardiac ARIA model is based on time to facilities by road via ambulance, the project also includes some basic calculations to give an indication of the time it would take rotary and fixed-wing air ambulances, in those areas where road transport was not a viable option.

A study in north-west New South Wales (Shepherd et al. 2008) compared the times of two-way helicopter journeys and one-way road retrievals for trauma victims. When transport times for distances less than 50 km from the hospital were compared, there was a statistically significant time advantage achieved for road transport over helicopter dispatch (helicopter transfer extended the transfer time by a mean of 19 min (P = 0.00)). Between 50 km and 100 km there was an overlap, but helicopter transport was significantly faster for distances beyond 100 km, with a mean difference of 48 min (P = 0.00).

There is a range where helicopter and fixed-wing transports commonly overlap. In 1990 Thomas et al. found that inter-facility transport time, and trauma patient outcomes were similar in the 150-250 km range, but helicopter costs were 400% greater (Thomas et al. 1990). In Canada, a study of trauma patient transfer from rural to tertiary care, found helicopter faster than fixed-wing in the less than 225 km range (Goldstein et al. 2003). When retrieval flight distances are extended beyond this range, fixed-wing aircraft become a more realistic and viable option.

Specifications of the helicopters generally used for aeromedical transport in Australia are listed in Table 13.

Table 19 Helicopter specifications

Aircraft Type	Cruise Speed	Range (Return trip)	Endurance
Bell 412	120 knots / 220 kph	300 nautical miles / 550 km	2.5 hours
BK117	125 knots / 230 kph	250 nautical miles / 460 km	2 hours
AW139	140 knots / 260 kph	500 nautical miles / 920 km	3.5 hours

The distance (not time) from each aeromedical helicopter base was calculated, to a limit of 250 km (Figure 32).

Fixed-wing aeromedical services in Australia generally operate single-engine (PC12) or twin-engine (B200) turbo prop aircraft. In 2009 Rio Tinto joined with RFDS to provide the first emergency jet service in Australia, based out of Perth Airport. The Rio Tinto Life Flight jet can fly anywhere in WA within three hours, halving travel times to some remote areas, such as the Kimberley. The specifications of these aircraft are listed in Table 14.

Table 20 Fixed-wing specifications

Aircraft Type	Cruise Speed	Range (Return trip)	Endurance
Pilatus PC-12 Single-engine turbo prop	245 knots / 455 kph	900 nautical miles / 1,665 km	3.5 hours
Beechcraft Super King Air B200 Twin-engine turbo prop	265 knots / 490 kph	750 nautical miles / 1,390 km	3 hours
Hawker 800XP2 Jet engine	440 knots / 815 kph	2,600 nautical miles / 4,814 km	6 hours

The distance (not time) from each base was calculated for the entire country (Figure 33). The distance (not time) to the nearest tertiary hospital was also calculated for the entire country (Figure 34).

The rotary and fixed-wing aircraft data was not used in the Cardiac ARIA modelling, as this version is a road only based index. The calculations for the air transport figures (Figure 32 - 34) are based on distance not time.

Further work would be required to incorporate air ambulance data into future versions of the index. For this model, no information has been collected regarding dispatch times. These can vary considerable depending on whether it is a rotary or fixed-wing aircraft, the preparations necessary before take-off (preparing and lodging flight plans, airport clearances, machine start-up time etc.), and if medics need to be collected or arrive from another location. Likewise the project did not calculate times for ground travel to and from fixed-wing ambulance, or refuelling locations and times.
